Vasco di Gama, a young officer in the navy, convinced of the existence of lands hitherto unknown to his countrymen, applies to the Royal Council of Portugal for means wherewith to prosecute his researches, producing in support of his assertions, two slaves, purchased by him in an African Slave Mart, whose features, garb, etc., prove them to be of a race unknown to Europeans. The superstitious ignorance of the Council leads to his being arrested and thrown into a dungeon. His captivity being shared by his two slaves, Selika and Nelusko, the former of whom has become deeply enamored of her master, while she herself is passionately beloved by her companion in bondage, Nelusko. Vasco, however, is soon released from prison, owing to the zealous intervention of Inez, now the wife of Don Pedro, but between whom and Vasco a deep attachment had long existed. Don Pedro has from some possessed of Vasco's papers, plans, etc., and having obtained from the King the command of a ship, he sets sail, hoping to carry out Vasco's projected discoveries. Don Pedro takes with him, on his voyage, his wife Inez, and the two slaves, Selika and Nelusko, whom he has purchased of their former master. As the ship approached the Cape of Storms, it is overtaken by a vessel carrying the same colors, and commanded by Vasco in person, whom an unexpected turn of fortune has enabled to fit out a ship for himself. Notwithstanding their mutual hate, Vasco comes on board Don Pedro's ship to caution him against the dangers with which the navigation in those latitudes is fraught. A quarrel however ensues, during which, in verification of Vasco's warning, the ship is suddenly boarded by Indians, who, after a desperate struggle, take the entire crew prisoners, and carry them away to a land rich in every tropical beauty, and of which the captive slave Selika, now proves to be the Queen. Don Pedro and his companions are immediately put to death. Selika, to save Vasco, informs her subjects that a marriage had been contracted between herself and the young Portuguese. Vasco, overcome by gratitude, is on the point of forgetting his love for Inez, when of a sudden, her voice is heard, as she and her attendants are being led to the sacrifice, bewailing her sad fate, and bidding an eternal adue to her native land. The well-known accents at once revive in Vasco's breast, all his former affection for Inez. Selika heart-broken on finding that her love for Vasco is unreturned, at first determines on signal vengence, but her better nature subsequently gains the ascendant, and she nobly restores the two lovers to liberty. Despair, however, takes possession of the unhappy Queen, and, unable to endure the torments of unrequited passion, she resolves to end her days by inhaling the perfume of the dread mancanilla tree, the exhalations of whose foliage lull her into a dreamy trance, from which she is awakened by the signal gun, announcing the departure of Vasco and his beloved Inez, to whose happiness, Don Pedro being dead, there is now no longer a barrier. Selika utters a passionate farewell to Vasco, and overcome by the poisonous emanations of the fatal tree, the unhappy Queen expires in the arms of her faithful and sorrowstricken Nelusko.

"The Foremost Cocoa of Europe.
The Coming One of America."
VAN HOUTEN'S
COCOA,
"BEST & GOES FARTHEST,"
are household words all over Europe. This first and, ever since its invention, best of all cocoas will, now that the manufacturers are drawing the attention of the American public to it, soon be appreciated here as well as elsewhere all over the world. All that the manufacturers request is simply one trial, or still better, a comparative test with whatever cocoa may be in use and then VAN HOUTEN'S Cocoa itself will convince everyone of its great superiority in strength, flavor and cheapness. It is because of this superiority that the English high class paper, Health, says: "Once tried; always used."
It is well known that "The cup that cheers but not inebriates" does not afford a particle of nourishment.
Eminent Doctors and Analysts of Europe concede that Van Houten's Cocoa both stimulates and nourishes and without leaving any injurious effect upon the nervous system.
It is a perfect beverage; cheap, cheering and sustaining.
"MUCH BETTER THAN TEA OR COFFEE FOR THE NERVES."
The King of Holland is highly pleased with VAN HOUTEN'S Cocoa and has granted the manufacturers (unsolicited) the right of styling their works the
by deed of August 12, 1889.

The KNABE PIANOS, which I did not know before, have been chosen for my present concert tour in the U.S. by my Impresario and accepted by me on the recommendation of my friend Bechstein acquainted with their merits. Had I known these Pianos as now I do I would have chosen them by myself, as their sound and touch are more sympathetic to my ears and hands than all others of the country.

NEW YORK, 6th April, 1880.

DR. HANS VON BULOW.

TO MESSRS. WILLIAM KNABE & CO.

One of the most desirable materials for a black gown, for summer wear is Priestley's Crêpellette. It is particularly adapted for traveling, shedding dust perfectly, and the slightly wiry nature of the goods making it delightfully cool and agreeable. This cloth has a pure silk warp and a pure mohair filling, and possesses all the merits of the Priestley fabrics.

"What are you doing?" asked a chap of a man who was loading the barrel of a hand-organ. "Putting on airs," was the comprehensive reply.

SISTERLY.—Elder sister—Oh, you fancy yourself very wise, I dare say, but I could give you a wrinkle or two!

Younger sister—No doubt—and never miss them.

SMALL BOY—Pa, what is hypocrisy, Father (speaking from experience)—Hypocrisy, my son, is shaking hands cordially with your neighbor and then, when his back is turned, kicking his dog savagely.

Visitor—Ah, you have a family album, I see. Lady—Well, yes, I suppose you might call it a family album. It contains the photographs of my deceased husbands. That large volume on the other table is my divorces, bound in morocco.

MUSICAL NOTES FROM ABROAD.

[From the American Musician.]

ITALY.

ROME.—Lalo's "Re d'Ys" was brought out in Italy for the first time at Argentina Theatre; though the scene was entrusted to excellent artists, and the opera was mounted superbly, through the generosity of Sonzogno, proprietor of the music, the "Re d'Ys" did not excite any enthusiasm; on the contrary, was received very coldly; the music was judged inferior to what had been expected. The singers, Mmes. Theodorine and Calvé, Sigira Garulli, Seguin and Wulmaun, did full justice to their respective parts, and were rewarded with frequent applause: the execution and mise en scene were highly satisfactory, but as a whole the "Re d'Ys" was not a success.

Rossini's "Otello" is to be revived this summer, with the tenor Stagno in the title rôle, which was once the "Cheval de Cataille" of the famous singer Tamberlick.

During the season of spring racing in May next, Gastaldon's new opera, "Mala Pasqua," will be brought out at the Costanzi Theatre. Gastaldon is known to fame as the anthor of the vulgar, but immensely popular song, "Musica proibita," which has as great a success as Robandi's "Stella Confidente."

The Pennsylvania Limited, performing a daily service between New York and Chicago, needed but one feature to complete the perfection of its appointments. The men had their porter and barber, and now she ladies have their maid and hair-dresser. The introduction of the maids is as novel as it is a unique feature. They will have an eye to the children, and have a care for invalids and ladies who may travel without a male escort. The convenience and comfort of having an attendant of one's own sex will be cordially appreciated by many women, and those who are inexperienced in travel. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company and the Pullman Palace Car Company deserve great credit for their persistent efforts to enhance the comfort and pleasure of their patrons.

The Mexican Central Railway Company have issued a book descriptive of Mexico. This, together with map folders and other printed matter, may be had free on application to any of its agents.

CALIFORNIA AND MEXICO.—The "Sunset Route" of the Southern Pacific Company is the popular line for winter tourists. Elegant Pullman Buffet Sleeping Cars between New Orleans, Texas, Arizona and California; also between New Orleans and the City of Mexico, via San Antonio, Eagle Pass and the Mexican International R. R. Shortest broad guage route from the east to all points in old Mexico. Consult an agent of the "Sunset Route" before purchasing your tickets to any points in Texas, Mexico, Arizona or California. Regular visitors to California are aware that the "Sunset Route" is the best, quickest and most comfortable during the winter months to all Southern California points.

The West Shore R. R. is one of the most popular lines for business and pleasure travel which run out of New York. First-class accommodations, courteous treatment and fast time are its prominent features.

Hoosac Tunnel Route. Short Line between Chicago and Boston, St. Louis and Boston and Cincinnati and Boston. Elegant Palace Sleeping Cars run through without change, via Niagara Falls.

INSTRUCTION TO WAITERS.—Landlord (aside to new waiter)—Mind you pay every attention to that stout gentleman yonder with the bloated face and wildly flashing eyes. He is a coarse, ill-mannered brute, and if he does not get exactly what he likes he is apt to throw the plate at your head. But as for that other gentleman, with the bald head and the close-cropped whiskers, sitting by himself at the side table, you can treat him without ceremony. LISBON.—A story reaches us from the Portuguese capital, which has all the appearance of being a canard, notwithstanding the fact of its having been published in several respectable European journals; it is to the effect that Rossini's opera, "Il Barbiere di Seviglia," was performed at the San Carlos Theatre on the last night of the Carnival season—all of the rôles, excepting that of Figaro, being filled by female members of the regular operatic troupe in appropriate costumes, while the choruses were rendered by female choristers in masculine dress. Mme. Tetrazzini was the Almaviva, and Mlles. Bnicioff, Matteuzzi, Cisterna and Giudice, the Don Basilio, Don Bartolo, Fiorello and Ufficiale respectively. It is added that the representation was immensely successful. Mme. Tetrazzini making a special hit as the love-sick Count, whose various costumes she wore with grace and chic.

MESSRS. CHICKERING & SONS.—It is very agreeable to me to add my name to the concert of praises of which your pianos are the object. To be just, I must declare them perfect, and Perfectissime (superlatively perfect).

There is no quality which is foreign to them. Your instruments possess in the supreme degree nobility and power of tone, elasticity and security of touch, harmony, brilliancy, solidity, charms and prestige; and thus offer an harmonious ensemble of perfection, to the exclusion of all defects.

Pianists of least pretensions will find means of drawing from them agreeable effects; and in face of such products—which truly do honor to the art of the construction of instruments—the rôle of the critic is as simple as that of the public; the one has but to applaud them conscientiously and with entire satisfaction, and the other but to procure them in the same manner.

In congratulating you sincerely upon the great and decisive success obtained at the Exposition at Paris, I am pleased to anticipate the happy continuation of the same in all places where your pianos will be heard; and I beg that you accept, gentlemen, the expression of my most distinguished sentiments of esteem and consideration.

My candidate is bound to win; the other man hasn't the ghost of a show, and as you've always wanted a riding horse, I thought I would just get you one and get it cheap."

"Did Mr. Ganderson—er—speak to you papa?" "Yes; he told me he had asked you to marry him, and you had consented and then he wanted my permission.' "And what did you say, papa, dear? You consented, of course?" "No. I told him if you had said 'yes' that settled it. Any thing I might say or do wouldn't make the slightest difference."

MUSICAL NOTES FROM ABROAD.

INDIA.

BOMBAY.—The Mohometans of Bombay and Poona are forbidden to attend theatrical performances under penalty of a fine of five rupees—for the first offense, and ten for the second; on the strict infraction the transgressor will be excommunicated from the Tawat, and at his death his body will be denied religious interment. Over 100,000 faithful adherents of the code of Islam have accepted the new law, which was passed owing to the recent performance of a drama in which one of the interlocutors represented the sacred person of the Prophet.

HOLLAND.

THE HAGUE.—Minnie Hauk opened a season of opera at the Royal Theatre on the 22d ult., appearing in the title rôle of "Mignon"; the season ended she goes to Frankfort and Leipzig in both of which cities she will sing for the first time in "Les Dragons de Villars."

GERMANY.

HAMBURG.—A critic of a prominent journal was refused entrance to a theatre by order of the manager, who thought that the "pen-pusher" had treated his troupe with undue severity; so the journalist had bought an admission ticket at the box office he sued the manager: the court decided that nobody could be prevented from entering a theatre for which he had purchased a ticket.

The composer, Kaiser, has just completed a new work entitled "Rodenstein," which will be produced at the Kroll Theatre next season; it will probably be brought out at Prague.

The first theatre to produce Reyer's "Salammbo" will be the Berlin Royal Opera House, the directors having recently signed the necessary contract with the proprietors of the new score.

WEIMAR.—Rizet's "Pêcheurs de Perles" is announced for immediate production at the Court Theatre.

WIESBADEN.—A lyrico-epic poem, "Nornegast," set to music by Zerlett, was recently heard for the first time; it was so well received that he contemplates arranging it in melodramatic form.

Musicians have often spoken of colors as expressing a tone. The French singer, Theo, while under the influence of opium spoke of hearing the sound of the colors; Berlioz often speaks of coloring a melody; Meyerbeer speaks of certain chords of Weber as "purple," and the poet Coleridge spoke of Beethoven's great funeral march in the "Heroic," symphony as "a procession in purple."

The Ménestrel charged Hans Richter with contempt for the French school because he conducted "Carmen" with his left hand, while it is his habit when directing the music-dramas of Wagner to use his right. Richter replied that the operas he and his orchestra knew best he conducted with his left hand because it was easier, less fatiguing, etc., an explanation wholly sensible. The little breeze thus created, says the Musical Herald, may lead to a new classifications of operas; in future dictionaries, along with a clearer explanation than now exists of the terms pizzicato ostinato and "wind staccato" we may find Smith and Pettengill set down as left-handed or goat composers, while Sudds and Leggett are among the sheep on the right.

SEASON 1890-1891.

The seventh regular season of GRAND OPERA IN GERMAN, will extend over a period of seventeen weeks, and will include fifty subscription nights and seventeen matinees.

The Directors desire, not only to give regular successful seasons of opera, but to make the Opera House a permanent home for music in America, free to all distinction as to class or prejudice. If in their earnest wish to make C. Opera House a school of art for all nationalities, and to that end it is proposed to present several new works by French, German and Italian composers for the first time in America during the coming season. Among these will be "Le Roi D'Ys," by Lalo; "Esclarmonde," by Massenet; "Asrael," by Franchetti; "The Vassal of Szigeth," by Smareglia; "The Templar and Jewess," (Ivanhoe), by Marschner, and "Le Mage," by Massenet, which last opera will be produced simultaneously here and at Paris.

The revivals will be of special interest, including "Carmen," "Hamlet," "Merry Wives of Windsor," and "The Taming of the Shrew," thus affording a repertoire so varied and attractive that it will appeal to all music-lovers alike. Three new Ballets will probably be presented during the season: "Dresden China," "Le Reve," and "Nella."

Among the ancient Greeks nothing great was expected of a man ignorant of music.

It is well-known that Beethoven never married, although he was a great admirer of beautiful women. He was refused several times, and appears to have been engaged at one time. The author of a book called, "Beethoven's Unsterbliche Geliebte" which has been recently published at Bonn, tries to prove that this "immortal love" of his was a countess named Therese Brunswick, living at Martonvasar in Hungary. Beethoven was betrothed to her in 1806, but on account of the aristocratic prejudices of her mother, no one but Therese's brother knew of this engagement. It lasted four years and was finally broken off, and all letters returned, because Beethoven saw no prospect of establishing a comfortable home for himself.

WAGNER IN MUNICH.

Everybody knows that during the reign of the late King Ludwig, Munich was the headquarters of Wagnerism; but few would have suspected how greatly Wagner exceeded in popularity all other operatic composers. From recently published statistics it appears that during the last twenty-five years 693 performances of Wagner's operas have been given in that city, the five composers ranking next in popular favor being Mozart, with 298 performances; Verdi, 210; Meyerbeer, 152; Rossini, 124; Gounod, 110. In other words, of the six most popular composers, two belonged to the German school, two to the French and two to the Italian-which shows a remarkable Catholicity of taste. Altogether 3,345 performances were given during this period; 2,223 being of German, 666 of French and 439 of Italian operas. Twelve were Swedish and five Russian.

The remarkable success of Cornelius' "Barber of Bagdad" at the Metropolitan Opera House last year has apparently induced several German opera houses to take up this long-neglected opera. It has already been revived at Munich and Vienna, and is to form the first operatic novelty of the season in Bremen and Dresden.

A curious thing happened lately at the Stadttheater of Bremen. In a performances of "Tannhäuser," Frau Bettaque, in consequence of the indisposition of another member of the company, played the two parts of Elizabeth and Venus. Oddly enough, it was this same ready capacity to appear as a substitute which first brought the young lady prominently forward some eight years ago. She was then in the chorus of the Berlin Opera House, and during a performance of the "Freischütz" the representative of Aennchen was suddenly taken ill. Frl. Bettaque offered to take the part on the spot, and did it with such success that from that evening her name became "a household word."

AN ÆOLIAN

Will enable you to have music in your home at any and all times without the aid of a musician.

It can be used by every member of the family, as the operation of playing it is so simple that it can be learned by anyone with a few days' practice.

It is not a mechanical instrument, but is capable of the most delicate shadings of tempo and expression.

Any piece of music can be obtained for the ÆOLIAN, but it is designed for and particularly adapted to the highest grades of classical and operatic music. All the WAGNER Overtures and BEETHOVEN Symphonies, together with works from all the masters are arranged for the ÆOLIAN, and are played with wonderful orchestral effect.

The tone of the ÆOLIAN is peculiarly soft and beautiful, resembling, more than anything else, a small orchestra with the different parts.

This wonderful instrument is on daily exhibition at the warerooms of

THE SINGER M'F'G CO.

Wagner was fond of snuff as is indicated in this passage from a letter to Liszt, written at Zürich, before the world had realized his genius: "I am in a miserable condition, and have great difficulty in persuading myself that it must go on like this, and that it would not really be more moral to put an end to this disgraceful kind of life. Solitude and disconsolate loneliness from morning till night—such are the days that follow each other and make up life. To cure my sick brain the doctor has prevailed upon me to give up taking snuff altogether; for the last six days I have not taken a single pinch, which only he can appreciate who is himself as passionate a snuff-taker as I was. Only now I begin to perceive that snuff was the solitary real enjoyment that I had occasionally, and now I give that up too. My torture is indescribable, but I shall persevere; that is settled."

The performances at the Royal Opera House of Berlin may now be heard through the telephone, several instruments having been fitted up in a building called the Urania, distant about two miles from the theatre. The singing is heard with great distinctness, the dialogue is less clear and the orchestral part comes out worst of all, only the loud passages being really heard at all; and in them chiefly the violins and trumpets. It is expected that this shortcoming will soon be remedied, and, if this can be done, the experiment may then be regarded as a perfect success.

ASRAEL.

Asrael and Nefta are angels, united by love's holiest ties. When Satan revolts against Heaven Israel goes forth to fight and is made a prisoner by the Demons. Sighing for his last love, Nefta, he is told by his captors that Heaven no longer exists, and if he goes with them he will be reunited to his adored one in Hell. Believing this, he submits to their proposal and is condemned by the Almighty for so doing.

The first act finds Asrael in Hell bemoaning his fate and sighing for Nefta. He requests Satan to let him go to Earth for one year, and promises to bring a soul robbed from Heaven as a reward. His desire is granted and he departs.

The next scene is in the celestial regions, and, after a hymn of glory by the angels, Nefta appears and asks to be permitted to go to Earth for a year as she has heard that Asrael has again appeared there. The arch tournament is proclaimed and Asrael appears and vanquishes the Princess by his supernatural power. The ring is handed to Asrael but he casts it at Lidora's feet with scorn. An uproar ensues in which Asrael is supported by Loretta, the Gypsy Queen, and the gypsies, and at the same time Nefta (now Sister Clotilde) appears and asks the cause of the disturbance. Asrael refuses to tell her. The soldiers are about to attack him, when he raises his hand, and every weapon falls to the earth. Nefta then recognizes Asrael. He departs with Loretta.

In the third act Asrael is found in the gypsies' camp, protected by the gypsies and Loretta, who is in love with him. Lidora visits Loretta and tells her that Asrael is a demon, and gives her a vial of holy water to cast on him while he sleeps, so that she can discover whom he really loves. Loretta does so, and while Asrael is writhing in agony, he is rescued by Nefta and the Nuns and borne to the convent.

In the last act, Israel, perfectly recovered, is about to depart from the convent when Nefta confesses her love for him. He has not obtained the soul he promised to Satan and is tempted to sacrifice the nun who loves him. Then Nefta endeavors to save him and implores him to utter a prayer and persuades him to recite after her. Amid a tremendous struggle between the celestial choir and the infernal powers, Asrael utters the prayer. As he proceeds his courage increases, and at the name of the Saviour the convent crumbles away and the tableau of Heaven is seen with Asrael and Nefta glorified among the angels.

ZOLA ON MUSIC.

According to Zola French provincials when they go to Paris prefer the opera to the theatre, and he gives this reason for it: "Literature demands a cultivation of the intellect, a degree of intelligence, to be thoroughly enjoyed; put if one only has a 'temperament' he can derive the keenest pleasure from music. I admit, of course, that there is such a thing as the education of the ear, I believe that no one can penetrate into the works of the great masters without an extreme refinement of sensation. Nevertheless we are purely in the kingdom of the senses, the intellect need not be present. And so I remember having studied at the popular concerts of Pasdeloup Alsatian tailors and boot-makers, and workmen greedily drinking in Beethoven, while it was plain that the admiration of the 'gentlemen' present was forced. The dream of a bootmaker who listens to the Symphony in A is worth as much as the dream of a pupil of the 'Ecole polytechnique.' An opera does not ask to be understood, it asks to be felt. . . . Now so far as music is concerned, there is no necessity of thought, and that is in itself delightful. It is so pleasant with a head free from exertion to give one's self up to amiable digestion in a bath of melody. Here is perfect happiness. The brain is light, one joys in his own flesh, and sensuality takes control."

ONE of the most significant signs of the time is the fact that Wagner's "Lohengrin" opens the carneval season in no fewer than seven Italian opera houses this year, the large theatres of Venice and San Carlo of Genoa being among the number. Even his later operas are beginning to meet with favor, and speaking of the recent performance, under Signor Faccio, of Wagner's only comic opera, the correspondent of the London Musical World writes: "Taken as a whole, lovers of Wagner may be satisfied with the success of the 'Meistersinger' here. The opera, with its difficult music, of unfamiliar musical form, its Shakesperean humor, its plot of German—but not Italian—popular interest, is on the whole less likely than many other of Wagner's works to please Italian audiences. That it has succeeded so well is a proof of the progress of musical culture in Italy during the past ten years."

"INSTRUMENTATION consists in letting each instrument play what best suits its peculiar nature, and the effect it is intended to produce. It is also the art of grouping together instruments so as to modify the tone of some by that of others, resulting in a peculiar quality of tone which no instruments would produce separately, nor united with other instruments of its own kind. This phase of instrumentation is in music exactly what coloring is in painting. Powerful resplendent and often exaggerated as it is to-day, it was hardly known before the end of the last century. We think that as in rythm, melody and expression, the study of models may put the student in the path of mastering it, but that he will not succeed without special natural gifts." Berlioz.

ANTON SEIDL ON THE LISZT ORGAN.

(Fac simile extract of a recent letter to Messrs. Mason & Hamlin, Makers.)

"Your Liszt Organs have surprised and delighted me more than I can say. Indeed, it would not surprise me if in the near future you succeeded in reproducing by means of the small instrument all the effects which at present only a large body of instrumentalists can produce.

To schools, churches, and musicians, so beautiful an instrument should prove a source of constant profit and delight"

Anton Seidl

Mason & Hamlin PIANOS.

Messrs. Mason & Hamlin invite examination of their Upright and Grand Pianos, constructed on the Screw-stringer System, invented by them in 1882, which has been pronounced by experts "the greatest improvement in pianos in half a century."

FATHER: "Ungrateful wretch! Do you wish to disgrace my honest name by going on the stage?" Son: "I shall take an assumed name." Father: "Indeed! But suppose you should win fame? How are people to know in that case that you are my son?"—Journal Amusant.

THERE has been much criticism of the Paris Opera of late. Gounod lays the blame for the unsatisfactory condition of things on the singers, who, he says, think too much of themselves and are too exacting in their dealings with directors. Lassalle has written a fierce reply to Gounod's criticisms, but the critics side with Gounod.

DORFLINGER'S AMERICAN CUT GLASS.

This name and trade mark label is a guarantee of the best cut glass in the World.

This Label is on the Best Ribbon Made.

THE ancient Celts believed so firmly in immortality, that they would lend money on the promise of receiving it back in the next world. This good old custom has lately become obsolete.

"A DRAMATIC Poet is praised for his power of drawing tears from our eyes. He shares this talent with the humblest onion."—Heine.

THE writers of blood curdling Siberian stories will not thank Mr. L. F. Gowing for the revelations he makes in his "Five Thousand Miles in a Sledge." He explodes the myth about the fierceness of the Russian wolf, and says that in reality it is a cowardly animal. Lonely pedestrians are sometimes devoured by them; but such a thing as an attack by wolves on a post-sledge he says is utterly unknown in Siberia.

"WE cannot imagine a complete education of man without music. It is the gymnastic of the affections. In suitable connection with exercise, it is necessary to keep body and soul in health."—Jean Paul.

THE Spanish tenor Gayarré, who died a few weeks ago at Madrid, obtained the largest price any tenor ever received in Europe—$1,500 a night. He left a fortune of three-quarters of a million dollars. Yet he was by no means the best tenor of the period.

IN 1711 an English author, James Harris, wrote that "musical imitation at best, is but an imperfect thing," and that music derives its power from another source than imitation: "There are various affections which may be raised by the power of music. There are sounds to make us cheerful, or sad, martial or tender; and so of almost every affection which we feel."

Paris Corset,

THE

has elicited the following comments from the N. Y. dailies:

N. Y. WORLD—
A remarkable display. Probably the richest and most varied assortment of Corsets ever shown.

N. Y. TRIBUNE—
The "Classique" Corset is specially valuable for its shape. It is shown in a variety of rich materials, of beautiful colors and delicate tints.

N. Y. TIMES—
One of the finest displays in Corsets ever made. The "Classique" is shown in a dazzling variety of delicate tints. It is noticeable for the long waist and short hip effect so much desired by the ladies.

N. Y. TELEGRAM—
For comfort and luxury this Corset cannot be equalled by any other Corset in the market.

N. Y. SUN—
It exceeds all former records in Corset making.

N. Y. PRESS—
This Corset is perfection.

N. Y. COM. ADVERTISER—
Every new idea evolved by the study of the requirements in making Corsets has been embodied in the "Classique."

The Best Seals

Must be picked out early, and those that remain after day of "pickings" are not generally desirable. The best tea is of the early and careful pickings of the ripest buds from the choicest plants, and not the refuse leaves mixed with dirt and other foreign substances, such as are sent to this country by the Chinese merchants.

SIROCCO TEA is an Indian (Assam) tea, and is noted for its purity, strength and quality. It is the tea used by the ladies of the nobility in England, and the sale in this country is already large among the highest class. It is put up in sealed packages and sold at 60c., 80c. and $1.00 per pound by the growers. All other Indian and Ceylon teas sold in America are bought either from us or from our fellow planters.

THE ÆOLIAN

The Greatest of all Musical Instruments.

THE IDEA

in inventing the Æolian was to make an instrument that would do away with the years of practice made necessary by the piano and organ, and at the same time to have it

IN NO WAY MECHANICAL,

but capable of the most delicate shadings of tempo and expression, entirely at the will of the performer. This has been accomplished, and

WITH ONE WEEK'S PRACTICE

a person without any musical education whatever can learn to play the Æolian perfectly. The great feature of the instrument is

THE HIGH CLASS OF MUSIC

it performs. The catalogue embraces nearly Five Thousand pieces, including the Symphonies, Operas and Overtures of all the masters. The rendition of these pieces is wonderfully accurate and correct, and this serves to make the Æolian for both old and young. The many thousands having musical taste and innate ability, but who are unable to give the years of practice necessary to enable them to perform with the accuracy demanded by their correct ear and cultivated taste, are with the Æolian able to gratify their love of music and play for themselves any and all classes of music.

A WONDERFUL EDUCATOR

One of the most remarkable things about the Æolian is

ITS PECULIARLY BEAUTIFUL TONE

It is not like the piano or organ, but resembles more than anything else a small orchestra with all its various parts. The Æolian is on exhibition daily, and visitors are always cordially welcome.

ORGAN grinders in Italy are generally allowed to use any melody they plense, provided they pay a small sum to the Association of Composers. Recently, however, the Minister of Fine Arts forbade the playing of extracts from Verdi's "Otello," by way of complimenting the aged maestro; for this edict was equivalent to saying that "Otello" is too fine a work of art to be mutilated by street musicians.

ARGUMENT.

TRISTAN AND ISOLDE

ACT I.—Prow of a large ship. The Knight Tristan has been sent from Cornwall to Ireland to bring over the Princess Isolde as bride for his uncle King Marke. Isolde, however, loves Tristan and he loves her; but, true to his post of honor, he refuses to see her on the journey. This seeming neglect so enrages her that she reads her attendent, Brangane, to fetch a vial containing a deadly poison. This she puts in a cup, summons Tristan and bids him drink it. But, before he has finished, she snatches away the cup, and drinks what remains. Brangane, however, had secretly substituted a magic love potion for the poison. It is this that now rapidly courses through the veins of the lovers and so inflames their passion that, regardless of everything, they fly to one another's arms. At this moment the sailors' chorus announces the arrival of the ship at Cornwall. The King approaches to meet his bride.

ACT II.—Garden adjoining Isolde's apartment. A torch is burning near the door, the extinction of which is to announce Tristan that all is ready for a clandestine interview. Forest horns are heard dying away in the distance, indicating the departure of the King on a hunting expedition. This, however, is a mere ruse, intended to put the lovers off their guard; for Melot, one of the courtiers, jealous of Tristan, had warned the King. Brangane suspects the treachery, but Isolde refuses to listen to her. She dashes the torch to the ground and Tristan appears. The King reproaches Tristan, who at first attempts to hide Isolde. Melot, provoked by Tristan, shouts "Treason!" and stabs him.

ACT III.—Tristan unconscious, lies on a couch in the yard of his castle in Bretagne, whither his attendant, Kurwenal had conveyed him after his affray with Melot. Fearing for Tristan's life, Kurwenal had sent for Isolde. A shepherd has been stationed on the look to watch for her ship. His melody at first sad and slow, suddenly becomes agitated, and Kurwenal rushes down to meet Isolde. While he is away the delirious Tristan tears away his bandage. Isolde arrives just in time to catch his body in her arms. Suddenly the shepherd announces the arrival of another ship with the King and followers. Kurwenal quickly barricades the door and stabs Melot, but receives a stab in return, and falls dead by Tristan's side. The King however, having heard from Brangane of the love potion, had come not to reclaim his bride but to give her to Tristan. Isolde, bending over Tristan's body, sings her dying song, called by a French admirer, "the swan-song of love, the marriage of two human souls with the world-soul."

"Van Houten's Cocoa,

are household words all over Europe. This first and, ever since its invention, best of all cocoas will, now that the manufacturers are drawing the attention of the American public to it, soon be appreciated here as well as elsewhere all over the world. All that the manufacturers request is simply one trial, or still better, a comparative test with whatever cocoa may be in use and then VAN HOUTEN'S Cocoa itself will convince every one of its great superiority in strength, flavor and cheapness. It is because of this superiority that the English high class paper Health, says: "Once used, always used.'

It is well known that "The cup that cheers but not inebriates" does not afford a particle of nourishment.

Eminent Doctors and Analysts of Europe concede that Van Houten's Cocoa both stimulates and nourishes and without leaving any injurious effect upon the nervous system.

It is a perfect beverage; cheap, cheering and sustaining.

The King of Holland is highly pleased with VAN HOUTEN'S Cocoa and has granted the manufacturers (unsolicited) the right of styling their works the SHALLOW critics have remarked that the opera is an unnatural form of art, because people do not naturally converse with each other in song. But compare with this what Carlyle says: "Observe how all passionate language does of itself become musical—with a finer music than the mere accent: the speech of a man even in jealous anger becomes a chant—a song. All deep things are song." The vocal style of Wagner and Franz is simply an intensification and artistic development of this natural song in speech; and by placing his song mostly in the mouth of mythologic heroes and gods, Wagner fortified himself still further against the charge of unnaturalness in making his characters sing instead of speaking. Christian angels are always supposed to sing—why should not heathen gods and heroes sing too?

(Fac simile extract of a recent letter to Messrs. Mason & Hamlin, Makers.)

"Your Liszt Organs have amazed and delighted me more than I can say. Indeed, it would not surprise me if in the near future you succeeded in reproducing by means of this small instrument all the effects which at present only a large body of instrumentalists can produce.

To schools, churches, and musicians, so beautiful an instrument should prove a source of constant profit and delight."

FATHER: "Ungrateful wretch! Do you wish to disgrace my honest name by going on the stage?" Son: "I shall take an assumed name." Father: "Indeed! But suppose you should win fame? How are people to know in that case that you are my son?"—Journal Amusant.

THERE has been much criticism of the Paris Opera of late. Gounod lays the blame for the unsatisfactory condition of things on the singers, who, he says, think too much of themselves and are too exacting in their dealings with directors. Lassalle has written a fierce reply to Gounod's criticisms, but the critics side with Gounod.

THE ancient Celts believed so firmly in immortality, that they would lend money on the promise of receiving it back in the next world. This good old custom has lately become obsolete.

"A DRAMATIC Poet is praised for his power of drawing tears from our eyes. He shares this talent with the humblest onion."—Heine.

THE writers of blood-curdling Siberian stories will not thank Mr. L. F. Gowing for the revelations he makes in his "Five Thousand Miles in a Sledge." He explodes the myth about the fierceness of the Russian wolf, and says that in reality it is a cowardly animal. Lonely pedestrians are sometimes devoured by them; but such a thing as an attack by wolves on a post-sledge he says is utterly unknown in Siberia.

"WE cannot imagine a complete education of man without music. It is the gymnastic of the affections. In suitable connection with exercise, it is necessary to keep body and soul in health."—Jean Paul.

THE Spanish tenor Gayarré, who died a few weeks ago at Madrid, obtained the largest price any tenor ever received in Europe—$1,500 a night. He left a fortune of three-quarters of a million dollars. Yet he was by no means the best tenor of the period.

ORGAN grinders in Italy are generally allowed to use any melody they please, provided they pay a small sum to the Association of Composers. Recently, however, the Minister of Fine Arts forbade the playing of extracts from Verdi's "Otello," by way of complimenting the aged maestro: for this edict was equivalent to saying that "Otello" is too fine a work of art to be mutilated by street musicians.

THE ÆOLIAN

The Greatest of all Musical Instruments.

THE IDEA

in inventing the Æolian was to make an instrument that would do away with the years of practice made necessary by the piano and organ, and at the same time to have it

IN NO WAY MECHANICAL,

but capable of the most delicate shadings of tempo and expression, entirely at the will of the performer. This has been accomplished, and

WITH ONE WEEK'S PRACTICE

a person without any musical education whatever can learn to play the Æolian perfectly. The great feature of the instrument is

THE HIGH CLASS OF MUSIC

it performs. The catalogue embraces nearly Five Thousand pieces, including the Symphonies, Operas and Overtures of all the masters. The rendition of these pieces is wonderfully accurate and correct, and this serves to make the Æolian for both old and young. The many thousands having musical taste and innate ability, but who are unable to give the years of practice necessary to enable them to perform with the accuracy demanded by their correct ear and cultivated taste, are with the Æolian able to gratify their love of music and play for themselves any and all classes of music.

One of the most remarkable things about the Æolian is

ITS PECULIARLY BEAUTIFUL TONE

It is not like the piano or organ, but resembles more than anything else a small orchestra with all its various parts. The Æolian is on exhibition daily, and visitors are always cordially welcome.

BANDS of mink or sable are shown at Gunther's for ball dresses, especially for those of scarlet or yellow tulle, a band of fur is about the fabric, or the low bodice is outlined with fur and the white neck made to look whiter. Tea gowns of white silk have collar and revers of the golden fur, and the full quaint sleeve is confined at the wrists by fetters in the shape of bands of soft sable.

DIE GOETTERDAEMMERUNG.

PRELUDE.—Same scene as at end of "Siegfried." Having won and wedded Brünnhilde, Siegfried gives her, as a pledge, the ring which he had found in the Dragon's den, and departs in quest of nightly adventure.

ACT I.—King Gunther's castle at the Rhine. Hagen (son of Gunther's mother and of the Nibelung, Alberich, who wishes to recover the ring through Hagen), advises Gunther to marry Brünnhilde. But h knows that none but Siegfried can approach the rock of the Valkyries, where she lives. Siegfried's opportune arrival enables him to carry out a cunning plot. He brews a magic draught and Gutrune, the King's sister, hands it to Siegfried. It has the effect of making him fall in love with Gutrune and forget all about Brünnhilde. Gunther promises him his sister's hand if he will woo Brünnhilde for him. Siegfried accepts and departs with Gunther. Scene changes back to Brunnhilde. She is visited by her sister, Waltraute, who urges her to restore her to the Rhine maidens. But Brunnhilde refuses to part ring with his pledge of faith. Meanwhile Siegfried has followe Hagen's advice and put on the Tarnhelmet, which enables him to assume the form of Gunther. He arrives, seizes Brunnhilde, forcibly takes the ring from her, and next morning takes her down to the Rhine, where Gunther is waiting for her.

ACT II.—Alberich meets Hagen, and once more urges him to secure the ring. Siegfried, thanks to the magic Tarnhelmet, arrive before Gunther and Brunnhilde. Hagen calls out his men to celebrate the King's Wedding. Brunnhilde is puzzled and indignant when she sees Siegfried as Gutrune's lover, and her anger reaches a climax when she sees her ring on his hand. She accuses him of treachery, and declares to the King that he won and enjoyed her love. Siegfried swears, on the point of Hagen's spear, that his sword rested bet ween him and Brunnhilde that night; but she pushes him away and swears that she was his bride. Great consternatin. Siegfried sneers at Borunnhilde as being a shrew and puts his arms around Gutrune and joins the wedding guests. Gunther who feels disgraced, remains with Brunnhilde and Hagen. At the latter's suggestion, they conclude that Siegfried must die, and Brunnhilde confides to him that she has made him invulnerable, except on the back, because Siegfried would never turn his back to an enemy.

ACT III.—The three Rhine maidens lament the loss of their gold and implore the sun to send that way the hero who wears their ring. The prayer is heard. Siegfried pursueing a bear, gets seperated from his companions and accidentally comes across the Rhine maidens. They beg him for the ring, but he refuses, whereupon they prophecy his death that very day. Hagen, Gunther and the other hunters arrive and prepare for a feast. Siegfried relates the story about Mime, the forrest bird, and the dragon—a charming musical and poetic synopsis of the whole "Siegfried" drama. When he gets to the place where he followed the bird to where Brunnhilde lay asleep, Hagen gives him a drink mixed the juice of an herb. This restores his remembrance of his wooing of Brunnhilde, and he relates it, to Gunther's horror. Two ravens fly across the stage. As Siegfried turns to look after them, Hagen stabs him in the back. The body is placed on his shield and carried up the hill, in the moonlight, to the sound of the majestic funeral march.

Scene changes back to royal palace. Siegfried's body is brought in and Gutrune throws herself on it. Hagen confesses he killed him, and claims the ring on his finger; but the corpse raises its hand in awful warning. At the moment Brunnhilde arrives. She orders a funeral pyre to be built, and after a final lament throws a brand into it. Then she mounts her horse and dashes into the flames. Soon the fire collapses, and the Rhine rises and covers the fire-place, bearing on its waves the Rhine daughters, one of whom triumphly secures the ring. Hagen jumps in, and is dragged beneath the water. A red light is seen in the sky. Walhalla is in flames; the end of the gods has come.

"Van Houten's Cocoa,

are household words all over Europe. This first and, ever since its invention, best of all cocoas will, now that the manufacturers are drawing the attention of the American public to it, soon be appreciated here as well as elsewhere all over the world. All that the manufacturers request is simply one trial, or still better, a comparative test with whatever cocoa may be in use and then VAN HOUTEN'S Cocoa itself will convince every one of its great superiority in strength, flavor and cheapness. It is because of this superiority that the English high class paper Health, says: "Once used, always used."

It is well known that "The cup that cheers but not inebriates" does not afford a particle of nourishment.

Eminent Doctors and Analysts of Europe concede that Van Houten's Cocoa both stimulates and nourishes and without leaving any injurious effect upon the nervous system.

It is a perfect beverage; cheap, cheering and sustaining.

The King of Holland is highly pleased with VAN HOUTEN'S Cocoa and has granted the manufacturers (unsolicited) the right of styling their works the

"INSTRUMENTATION consists in letting each instrument play what best suits its peculiar nature, and the effect it is intended to produce. It is also the art of grouping together instruments so as to modify the tone of some by that of others, resulting in a peculiar quality of tone which no instruments would produce separately, not united with other instruments of its own kind. This phase of instrumentation is in music exactly what coloring is in painting. Powerful, resplendent and often exaggerated as it is to-day, it was hardly known before the end of the last century. We think that as in rythm, melody and expression, the study of models may put the student in the path of mastering it, but that he will not succeed without special natural gifts." Berlioz.

"MEN of humor are always in some degree men of genius; wits are rarely so, although a man of genius may, amongst other gifts, possess wit, as Shakespeare."—Coleridge.

A RECENT biographer of Mr. Southern relates one of his practical jokes. One day Southern went to Greenwich with his friend Toole to dine. While the waiter was absent they concealed all the silverware, opened a window and crawled under a table. The waiter reenters, sees that the silverware is gone and runs to inform the landlord. Meanwhile the two jolly jokers resumed their places at the table, restored the spoons, and when the restaurateur rushed in with all the waiters, they inquired in the most innocent and suprised manner why the soup had not been served yet.

THE SIXTH REGULAR SEASON OF

under the management of the Board of Directors, will commence at the Metropolitan Opera House on Wednesday Evening, November 27th, 1889, and continue until Saturday, March 22d, 1890.

The season will consist of 67 Performances, which will consist of 50 Subscription Nights and 17 Matinees.

During this period the Directors hope to present a varied repertoire that will appeal to all lovers of music, independent of school or nationality. They would call attention to the fact that in the Operas selected, French, German and Italian composers are largely represented. For the first time in this country the great Parisian success, "Le Roi D'Ys" will be given, and the Operas of Otello, La Gioconda Templer and Judin (Nauhoe), Norma, Bal Masque, and Barber of Bagdad will be revived. In connection with the last named Opera the Ballet, "Die Puppenfee," which has had great success abroad, will be given. Of the Artists engaged nothing need be said as those who have heretofore appeared before this public, as they are well and deservedly known to the music lovers of this city.

As to the others, the Directors have endeavored in every way to engage the best talent, and among those who will make their first appearance in New York, they have secured several whose reputation is world wide. Having already given the full "Ring of the Nibelungen," the Directors propose during the coming season to produce a Cyclus of all the Wagner Operas (excepting "Parsifal") in chronological order.

Engagements have been made with the following distinguished artists:

SOPRANOS AND CONTRALTOS.

THERE are three principal historic stages in the evolution of artistic singing. When music first began to be treated as an art, in the middle ages, composers tried to unite as many voices as possible, each singing a different part. The result was a polyphonic confusion in which the words of the text could not be understood at all. In course of time it came to be understood that this was really an instrumental and not a vocal style, so it was transferred to the organ and piano. In the second stage vocal music became florid, ornamental—full of runs and trills and arpeggios—as in Italian operas of the Donizetti school. At present however, it is becoming evident that this style of singing also is instrumental in character, because it ignores the poetic text. Hence we have the modern dramatic style, as exemplified in the songs of Schubert, Schumann and Franz, and the operas of Wagner, which are truly vocal because in them the words are as important as the music.

THERE is a good old story of Lulli, the first great opera composer in France, which deserves occasional repetition. One day, when he was ill and feared that his last days were at hand, he sent for a priest, and desired to make his peace with the church. The priest advised him to seek atonement for his sins by destroying something dear to him—say the score of his last opera, "Armida." Lulli immediately ordered his servant to throw the score in the fire. A few days later, when a friend of his lamented the loss of this fine work, Lulli whisperd in his ear: "Calm yourself, Monsieur; I knew what I was doing; there in that bookcase you will find a copy of the opera."

"HEAVY operas" are very much dreaded by some people, who have an idea that such operas only have an educational value and do not give real pleasure and entertainment. Nothing could be more absurd than such a notion. The first hearing of such an opera as Weber's "Euryanthe," or Wagner's "Siegfried," is indeed akin to reading a scientific treatise; because it is such a strain on the attention. But with every repeated hearing this mental strain is lessened, and the pleasure derived from the music becomes more and more keen, until at last it kindles into enthusiasm. But the trouble with many people is that they refuse to see an opera again which bored or fatigued them the first time; and thus they lose a world of pleasure. Wagnerites are apt to be angry at those who abuse the works of their favorite composer. They should rather pity them for losing so much keen enjoyment.

THE prize medal for absent-mindedness during lectures must be awarded to a German professor named Johannes Amer, who recently died in Vienna. One of his pupils has a list of his remarkable sayings, among them the following: "Julius Cæsar, disguised as a slave, swam naked across the Tiber." "Alexander the Great was born in the absence of his parents." "The Swiss are a mountainous nation, but in Scotland the climate does not begin till October." "Hogs were invented in Asia Minor." Thus arose a general war on page 94." "The third Tunic war would have been out much sooner had it commenced a little earlier." "Covered with countless wounds Cæsar fell dead near the statue of Pompey: with one hand he drew his toga over his face, while with the other he called for help."

MUCH has been written lately in newspapers and magazines regarding the comparative charms of blondes and brunettes, and the remarkable recent increase in the number of brunettes. Admirers of the blonde type always refer with pride to the accepted fact that those models of physical beauty, the ancient Greeks, were of the blonde type. This assertion, however, needs some qualification, according to Dr. Falke, who in his great works on Greece and Rome remarks: 'The original Greek type was the dark-blonde, with auburn hair and blue eyes, as the painted figures of Tanagra plainly show; but the scattering of the Greek race, their intercourse and connection with foreigners on all coasts and at all marts, had brought the brunette type into favor, and given a preference for black hair and eyes."

Beethoven, although rough and uncouth in his manners, was a great admirer of beautiful women, and would often stand still and look after a beauty who passed him on the street. He could also get off a neat compliment on occasion. One evening, when he was at a party graced by a celebrated beauty of the day, he took out his note book and sketched a new song in it. This he afterwards showed and sang to her, with the remark: "There, how does that sound? It is yours, if you like it; I made it for you; your inspired me with it; I saw it written in your eyes."

"An ear for music is a very different thing from a taste for music. I have no ear whatever; I could not sing an air to save my life; but I have the intensest delight in music, and can detect good from bad. Naldi, a good fellow, remarked to me once at a concert, that I did not seem much interested with a piece of Rossini's which had just been performed. I said it sounded to me like nonsense verses. But I could scarcely contain myself when a thing of Beethoven's followed."—Coleridge's Table Talk.

Most of the great German composers, not only struggled with poverty during their whole life, but some died so poor that their relatives and friends had to pay their funeral expenses—Schubert for instance. Gluck was an exception. He married, at the age of 36, the daughter of a wealthy merchant, and he was also well paid for his operas. For his "Iphigenia in Tauris" he received $3,000, and for "Echo and Narcissus" $4,000. At the court of Vienna he had a regular salary of $1,000 a year, and at the French court $600 a year, to the end of his life. It is a curious fact that, not generally known perhaps, that only ten years elapsed between the appearance of Gluck's "Armida" and Mozart's "Don Juan."

"WHAT is true and genuine would more easily gain room in the world if it were not that those who are incapable of proving it are also sworn to prevent it from succeeding."—Schopenhauer.

"THE Italian is a singer, the Frenchman a virtuoso, the German a musician. The German has a right to be designed exclusively as musician, for of him it may be said that he loves music for his own sake, and not as a means simply to delight, or to attain money, or notoriety: but instead, because it is a divinely beautiful art which he reveres while if he yields himself up to its service, will be all in all to him."—Wagner.

CARL ROSA was the only manager who ever succeeded in making English Opera pay perpetually. It is, therefore, of interest and instructive to find the following assertion among his confessions: I have always endeavored to accustome the public to go and hear a work instead of a particular singer, and when I found that a singer wanted to be the opera, I have dispensed with his or her services, however valuable they might have been." Comparing England with Germany, he says: "opera in Germany occupies the same position among national amusements as sport does in England. There you will as often hear a new tenor spoken of in clubs, rest assured and railway trains, as here the horse are which the odds are laid for the Derby."

BANDS of mink or sable are shown at Gunther's for ball dresses, especially for those of scarlet or yellow tulle, a band of fur is about the tablier, or the low bodice is outlined with fur and the white neck made to look whiter. Tea gowns of white silk have collar and revers of the golden fur, and the full quaint sleeve is confined at the wrists by fetters in the shape of bands of soft sable.

ARGUMENT.

TANNHAUSER.

ACT I—Grotto of Venus. Tannhauser, a minstrel knight, after securing a prize at a vocal contest, which won him at same time the love of Elisabeth, daughter of Landgrave of Thuringia, had mysteriously disappeared. As curtain rises we behold him in a mountain, entrapped by charms of Venus. Wild, unholy orgies of nymphs alternate with seductive songs of sirens. Tannhauser, tired of these pleasures, longs to return to outer world. Venus begs and threatens in vain. He calls on Virgin Mary, the grotto disappears and he finds himself in a beautiful valley. A young shepherd sings a quaint song. Pilgrams march across stage and disappear. Landgrave and huntsmen arrive, find Tannhauser and beg him to return to the castle. He refuses, until Wolfram, his generous rival in song and love, begs him to return for Elisabeth's sake.

ACT II.—Elisabeth greets the returning knight. The Landgrave, suspecting her love and feeling sure of the winner, announces another vocal contest, promising his daughter's hand to the victor. Love is given out as subject of the contest. Wolfram and other knights sing of pure ideal love, but Tannhauser sings of worldly passion, and finally exclaims excitedly that he can only know real love who has been in the mountain of the heathen goddess. Great consternation. The women hurriedly leave, the knights draw their swords. But Elisabeth interposes, begs mercy for Tannhauser, and permission for him to join the Pilgrams and implore the Pope at Rome to forgive his sins.

ACT III.—Wolfram discovers Elisabeth kneeling before the cross awaiting Tannhauser's return. Pilgrams arrives but he is not among them. After praying alond, she leaves refusing Wolfram's escort, who remains and sings his song to evening star. Suddenly he discovers Tannhauser in tattered clothes. In a highly dramatic monologue, he tell, how the Pope refused him pardon, unless the dead staff in his hand should again get fresh leaves. In his dispair he wishes to return to Venus, who is suddenly seen with her nymphs in a rosy twilight, while perfume and the magic music fill the air. Tannhauser seems lost, when once more Wolfram uttere the magic word "Elisabeth," and the clear phantoms dispear. Procession, chanting funeral chorus, approaches, bearing Elisabeth on a bier. Tannhauser sinks down on coffin dead.

are household words all over Europe. This first and, ever since its invention, best of all cocoas will, now that the manufacturers are drawing the attention of the American public to it, soon be appreciated here as well as elsewhere all over the world. All that the manufacturers request is simply one trial, or still better, a comparative test with whatever cocoa may be in use and then VAN HOUTEN'S Cocoa itself will convince every one of its great superiority in strength, flavor and cheapness. It is because of this superiority that the English high class paper Health, says: "Once used, always used."

It is well known that "The cup that cheers but not inebriates" does not afford a particle of nourishment.

Eminent Doctors and Analysts of Europe concede that Van Houten's Cocoa both stimulates and nourishes and without leaving any injurious effect upon the nervous system.

It is a perfect beverage; cheap, cheering and sustaining.

The King of Holland is highly pleased with VAN HOUTEN'S Cocoa and has granted the manufacturers (unsolicited) the right of styling their works the MUSIC is the most original of all the arts, being, more than any other, the special creation of the human mind. The sculptor and the painter can find their prototypes and models in the forms of beautiful men and women, and in natural scenery; the poet depicts the actions and feelings of his fellow mortals; and even the architect uses few forms and designs which he might not have copied from the shapes of mountains, trees and flowers. But the musicians have been obliged to create their art almost entirely out of their "inner consciousness." Nature plays no symphonies or operas, and the short scraps of melody that are to be found in bird songs, or the noises of waterfalls and pine forests, poetic though they are, could hardly have suggested even an alphabet for the musician's art. He had to invent rhythm, melody and harmony; invent song, the musical forms of the sonata, symphony, song, opera, oratorio, and the countless minor forms of compositions; invent the numerous instruments which have been in use at various times, and the best of which are now united in the modern orchestra; invent a notation a method of writing music and reading it at a glance; and so on. Everything had to be invented, gradually improved and perfected; and the Darwinian law of the survival of the fittest is illustrated in the history of musical scales, forms of composition, and instruments, as well as in the evolution of animal forms.

M. VACCORBEIL, the late lessee of the Grand Opera in Paris, lost about $120,000 in one run of bad luck. The present directors, Ritt & Gaillard, have had better luck, yet they expect to lose about $60,000 by the time their contract expires. They are compelled by their contract to produce a certain number of new works; and new works are always more or less of a lottery. Massenet's "Cid," for instance, brought in about $60,000; but it was all lost on Reyer's "Sigurd." Again, Paladilhe's "Patrie" was a success, and Salvayre's "Dame de Monsoreau" a failure. When Saint-Saens's "Ascanio" is produced, the nightly expense will amount to $4,000, which, allowing for the state subsidy, requires over $3,000 a night merely to cover expenses.

A FAMOUS SINGER OF THE 18TH CENTURY.

Great as is the fame of Patti, Nilsson, and Jenny Lind, in our days, it was almost surpassed by some of the male sopranos who were fashionable in the last century. One of these was Farinelli, a scion of an aristocratic Neapolitan family. Indirectly this singer was responsible for the development of a form of music with which he had little or nothing to do—the oratorio. In the height of his glory he was brought to London by Handel's rival in operatic management; and his success was so great that Handel had to abandon opera and thenceforth devote himself to oratorio.

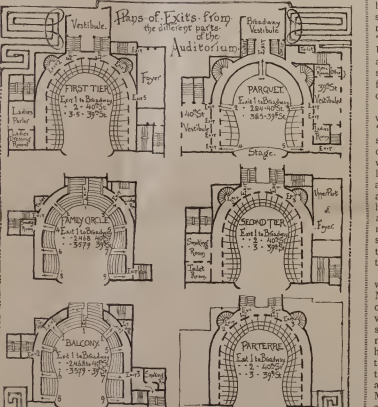
Wherever he went, Farinelli excited the same furore with his brilliant runs and trills. One day the Emperor Charles VI. urged him not to be so extravagant in the use of his voice, and to pay more attention to expression. This induced him to change his style, and he became the favorite of the Emperor, to whom he had to sing the same four songs every day for years, and through whom he gained great influence in political matters.

With the uneducated audiences of the day, however, his popularity depended on the agility and wonderful powers of endurance of his voice. One day he entered into a contest with a trumpeter to see which of the two could hold out a tone longest, and produce the longest chain of trills without taking breath. Another time he began a note so softly and gradually increased it to such loudness that the audience applauded him five minutes. Then he began to sing with such extraordinary rapidity that the orchestra could hardly keep pace with him! Dr. Dommer observes that if a singer indulged in such cheap tricks at the present day he would be hissed; nevertheless, there are not a few people who applaud a tenor for holding on to a high, loud note, indefinitely, for no other reason than that of showing the power of his lungs.

The truth that such vocal tricks as Farinelli delighted in are vulgar, was recognized as early as 1550 by the theorist Caccini, who declared that extensive roulades and passages (lunghi giri di voce) were by no means a necessity of good vocal art, but were only calculated to tickle the ears, being in reality antagonistic to expressive song.

THE FEES OF GREAT SINGERS.

A retrospective glance at operahouse and concert-room annals can scarcely fail to startle any right-minded person who may happen to be acquainted with the scale of payment to great singers that obtained from twenty to thirty years ago, as well as that which contemporary vocalists have succeeded in establishing and are strenuously striving to maintain. What was the fee for singing at a concert asked by the gifted Giulia Grisi and her inimitable husband, Mario di Candia? Fifteen pounds or thereabouts, even when those surpassing songsters were in the zenith of their powers and popularity. Mr. Sims Reeves, who in the autumn of his brilliant career demands and obtains one hundred guineas for singing a couple of ballads in the course of an afternoon or evening, was glad, when his voice was at its best, to accept an engagement for himself and his talented wife at Drury Lane, their joint salaries amounting to fifty pounds a week. Madame Sainton, when, as Miss Dolby, she was universally recognized as the finest contralto singer in this country, was content with an honorarium of eight guineas for her services in concert or oratorio. Miss Paton, one of the greatest English vocalists of her day, sang nightly in leading operatic parts for twenty pounds a week, the salary that was also deemed an adequate remuneration for similar services by those eminent tenor singers, Messrs. Harrison, Templeton, and Wilson, as well as by that accomplished artist, Mr. Romer.



Examples could be multiplied, almost without number, of the relatively moderate terms that were asked by vocalists and accorded by impresarii at the time when those who provided musical recreation for the people were able to entertain a reasonable expectation that they would recoup their outlay, and even earn a certain amount of profit on their undertakings. How can they hope to do so nowadays, when—to cite only three salient instances of exaggerated demands put forward by prime donne—Madame Adelina Patti is paid for her doubtless inimitable performances at the rate of four hundred guineas a night, Madame Albani claims one hundred and seventy-five guineas for singing at a Brighton concert, and Madame Christine Nilsson declines to charm any audience by discoursing most excellent music at a lower figure than two hundred and ten pounds sterling? Such are the fees exacted in the Year of Grace 1884 by songstresses of indisputable talent for singing two or, mayhap, three songs, with an interval of an hour between each effort.

FIDES TOOTH.

Here is an old story, concerning which it may be said, that if not true, it is well invented: Mme. Pauline Viardot, the ever-to-be-remembered Fides in Meyerbeer's "Le Prophete," had an incisor tooth in her upper jaw which was longer than the rest of her pearly jewels. A few evenings before the first performance of "Le Prophete," during a general rehearsal, Meyerbeer went into her room at the theatre and told her he could not consent to let her sing the part of Fides. "How so?" exclaimed the startled and terror-stricken artist. "am I wrong in my interpretation of the rôle?" "Madame," replied the composer, "you are a perfect Fides. I could not dream of a tragic singer doing better than you do, but you cannot perform Fides unless—unless—" "Unless what?" exclaimed Viardot and burst into tears. "Unless you submit to a painful surgical operation. Unless you have the tooth that disfigures you cut to the length of the others." "Oh, sir, it would be terrible! I couldn't live through the agony." "Not at all, madame, I have just ordered the dentist of the Queen of Prussia to come to Paris for the express purpose of attending your operatic majesty, and you may rely upon his unsurpassed skill."

It was a condition precedent to the performance of Fides, and Mme. Viardot placed her precious head in the hands of Dr. Mullkeistrom, who deftly and painlessly removed the obnoxious bit of ivory. On the night of the first production, when the thunders which the greatest Fides who has ever lived had evoked, were dying away, Meyerbeer sought Viardot's side, and adjusted to her wrist a diamond bracelet worth 30,000 francs, in the middle of which, surrounded by rubies, was the small bit of tooth which for years had disfigured the great singer's features. It would be interesting to have Mme. Viardot's confirmation of this unique romance.

MOZART'S "DON JUAN."

In 1786, a few months after the successful performance of his "Figaro" in Vienna, Mozart was invited to Prague to witness the immense enthusiasm it had aroused in Prague. As he wrote in one of his letters: "The one subject of conversation here is 'Figaro;' nothing is played, sung or whistled but—'Figaro;' nobody goes to any opera but—'Figaro;' everlastingly 'Figaro.'" Under these circumstances he readily agreed to Bondini's demand that he should write a new opera, specially for Prague, for which he was to receive 100 ducats.

This opera, for which Da Ponte wrote the libretto, was "Don Juan." "On the evening before the representation," says Herr Pohl, "the overture was still wanting, and he worked at it far into the night, while his wife kept him supplied with punch and told him fairy stories to keep him awake. Sleep, however, overcame him, and he was obliged to rest for a few hours, but at seven in the morning the copyist received the score, and it was played at eight in the evening." The first performance took place Oct. 29, 1787.

Dr. Gehring observes that Goethe was not at fault when he oberved that Mozart would have been the man to compose his "Faust." "Don Giovanni" is the expression of a universal genius, which could reproduce in music every emotion of the human heart—great and small—with equal truth to nature. And Dr. Hanslick, the famous Viennese critic, after admitting that there is much in Mozart that has become antiquated, claims "Don Juan" as a distinct exception, which after a life time of critical duty "has preserved its original power over me and fills me at every performance with fresh delight and admiration."

One of the most noteworthy things in "Don Juan" is the fact that the most original and fascinating music in it occurs in the scene where the ghost appears to Don Juan. The supernatural always seems to have inspired composers to their best efforts, and it is surprising how many of the best operas are based on such subjects.

"Don Juan" represents the culminating point of Italian opera, and also the point where it meets German opera. For Mozart was quite as much Italian as he was German; and if on the one hand he owed much of his success to the study of Italian vocal models, the Italian composers, Rossini and others, on the other hand, learned much from Mozart regarding the use of the orchestra.

BY GUSTAV KOBBE.

I said that spectacular works ("scene-painter's and property-master's pieces") called for a far greater quantity of material features than "Tristan and Isolde." It can be stated of Wagner's works in general that the properties required for their production are less numerous and that as a rule the scenery is less gorgeous than that required for spectacular opera. Yet it is more difficult to mount a Wagner opera or music-drama than it is to mount the "Queen of Sheba," "Merlin," "Aïda," "L'Africaine," or "Ferdinand Cortez." The reason is that Wagner's works call for quality instead of quantity. In many of the older operas the scenic painter often reproduced mechanically actual buildings or copied parts of them into his scene. Spanish churches and palaces and bits of Italian architecture were frequently utilized. But in painting scenery for a Wagner work the artist must exercise his imagination as well as his hands. The only basis for the scenery of the "Ring des Nibelungen" is the libretto. The interior of Hunding's dwelling in the first act of "Die Walküre" must be as dramatically significant as the gestures of the artists. Such a scene, with its stern outlines and sombre coloring, is a far greater triumph of scenic art than the glittering magnificence of Solomon's Temple in the "Queen of Sheba." This point of quality versus quantity was so carefully and successfully elaborated in Mr. Apthorp's article on "Wagner and Scenic Art" (SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE, November, 1887) that, as far as scenery is concerned, I need not follow the subject any further. But it is as true of the property-master's work as of the scenic artist's. For the former is confronted with problems of great intricacy, the solution of which requires mechanical genius as distinguished from the mere manual dexterity called for in the manufacture of sword, shields, and numerous other properties. Indeed, the mechanical properties used in Wagner's works are constant objects of study, attempts to improve them by simplifying the apparatus for working them being made from time to time. The "Lohengrin" swan is an excellent example of this feature of Wagnerian production. Though many years have passed since "Lohengrin" was performed for the first time, the latest device for bringing on the swan in a life-like manner was introduced only three years ago. The apparatus as at present constructed is the result of the survival of the fittest, its evolution having proceeded on the lines of the principle already stated, that a mechanical property should be so constructed that it can be worked by the smallest possible number of men. Formerly the miniature figures of the swan and Lohengrin having been drawn across the background, the knight of the Holy Grail and his ornithological motor suddenly emerged from behind one of the wings directly back of the river's bank and moved half-way across the stage. There Lohengrin disembarked and sang his "Farewell, my faithful Swan!"

The latest improvement was devised in order that the swan might have the appearance of swimming down the winding stream. At the same time the apparatus was so constructed, that it could be worked by only two men. The shell-like craft in which Lohengrin stands was built upon a three-wheeled truck (as shown in the illustration), the top of which was just concealed by the set-piece representing the bank of the Scheldt. Under this truck sat two men in positions which enabled them to place their feet on the floor and thus shove the truck along, the man over the front wheel steering by means of a rod connected with this wheel. The swan is supported by two rods running out from the front of the truck. The use of this apparatus necessitates an arrangement of the set-pieces of water different from that formerly in vogue. It is now as shown in the diagram, the drop giving a view of the distant town and the Scheldt winding through the meadow and broadening out toward the foreground.

The neck of the swan is "built" around a steel spring; the body and wings are feathers and swan's-down upon wire-work. It will be remembered that while Lohengrin sings his farewell the swan gracefully inclines its head and gently spreads its wings. The former motion is produced by a thin fishing-line which is attached to the swan's beak and pulled by one of the men under the truck. The wings work by a clock-movement. In the last act of "Lohengrin" the swan sinks from view—it is transformed into Elsa's brother—and a dove flutters in front of the boat as it bears the knight homeward. This change is effected very simply. The rods upon which the swan rests work on hinges and are held in position by two lines drawn taut by one of the men under the truck, who at the proper moment slackens the line, causing the rods to drop by the weight of the swan, which sinks out of sight. The man sitting near the front wheel then shoves out a rod to the end of which a mechanical dove is attached, it and the curved end of the rod having been concealed behind the prow of Lohengrin's shell-like craft. When "Lohengrin" was first given at Her Majesty's, London, an attempt was made to introduce this apparatus. It was duly rehearsed, but at the performance set-water strips b and c were placed too near the bank, so cramping the truck's steering room that it crashed into the bank. Campanini, who was the Lohengrin, dropped sword and shield, and facing the audience shouted: "There's stage-management for you!"

It is noteworthy in connection with this circumstance that the apparatus was devised by an Englishman, and that Wagner employed an English property-master to design and make the dragon for the "Siegfried" performances at Baireuth. The English pantomime productions, which involve the manufacture of numerous mechanical and trick properties, have sharpened the ingenuity of English property-masters until they have come to be acknowledged at the head of their profession. "Siegfried" never having been given in England by any but a German company, whose scenery and properties were brought from Germany, the combat with the dragon remained as ludicrous a feature of the performances of this work as it was conceded to have been at Baireuth, until the production of "Siegfried" at the Metropolitan Opera-House. For this a dragon was designed and manufactured which the German artists declare to be the most practical and impressive monster they have seen. The head of this dragon is papier-maché. The body, thirty feet long, is of thin wire covered with curled leather scales, which are bronzed and painted. This monster, in spite of its size, is worked by a boy who is the dragon's front legs. He is dressed in a suit of canvas painted the color of the dragon's hide and having curled leather scales on the trousers below the knees his shoes being the huge clawed feet. He gets into the dragon behind its head, which conceals him from the waist up, his legs being the dragon's front legs. With his hands he opens and closes its huge mouth and shoves its eyelids over its eyes when it expires. The steam which it breathes out is supplied through an elastic pipe which, entering at the tail, runs through to the throat. The scene lasts about forty minutes and is very exhausting to the front legs. In Germany the artist who sings the dragon's part is inside the hide and sings through a speaking trumpet. At the Metropolitan Opera-House the artist sits under the raised bridge upon which the dragon is placed and sings through a speaking trumpet. His music is on a stand, a stage-hand throws the light of a lamp upon it, and the solo register gives him his cues from the wings. The voice sounds as though it issued from the dragon's throat. The advantage of this arrangement is that it places in the monster a person whose attention is concentrated upon working this mechanical property in the best possible manner. The dragon when not in commission is stabled in mid-air under the paint-bridge. The day of the performance it is lowered by ropes, thoroughly groomed, and then allowed to stretch itself out upon the floor against the rear wall and lie there until the end of the first act. These two illustrations of Wagnerian mechanical properties suffice to show the high order of skill required for their production.

Many properties are the joint products of the property-master and the gas-engineer, the latter executing the most delicate portions of the work. Few people have any idea of the complicated character of this functionary's duties. It is usually thought that his work is limited to lighting the chandelier in the auditorium and turning to the foot-lights and border-lights up and down. In point of fact several of the most beautiful scenes in modern musico-dramatic works depend largely for their effect upon the efficiency of the gas-engineer. The simplest among his many duties are performed at an apparatus which to the uninitiated seems very complex. This is the "gas-table." It consist of a table and an upright slab near the proscenium on the prompt-side. With its seventy-two valves the gas-engineer controls every gas-fixture in the house. It is frequently mistaken by visitors behind the scenes for a soda-water fountain for

ARGUMENT.

Scene I. Three Rhine-Nymphs, guarding the mysterious treasure of the Rhine-gold, are visited by a gnome, Alberic, who endeavors to win their favor. Goaded to frenzy by their contempt and teasing, he utters a vow to renounce love, which enables him to lay hold of the Rhine-gold and shape therefrom a ring of mighty power.

Scene II. Wotan has caused the giants Fasolt and Fafmir to build him a castle, agreeing—at the instigation of Loki, the god of deceit—to yield Freia, the goddess of youth and beauty, in payment. He in vain strives to avoid fulfilment of his promise. Finally the giants offer to take Alberic's treasure instead. Wotan indignantly refuses to turn thief, until, being deprived of Freia, all the gods turn gray and old. Forced to save himself, he then descends to Nibelheim with Loki.

Scene III. Alberic has now made himself ruler of all his kind, and has amassed a hoard of treasure by help of the Ring. He has also caused his brother Mimi to make him a Tarnhelm, or wishing-cap. Loki cunningly persuades him to show off the powers of this cap, and accordingly he changes himself first to a dragon and then to a toad. In the latter form the gods seize and bind him and carry him off a prisoner in triumph.

Scene IV. Forced to yield all his treasures, even the Tarnhelm and Ring, as the price of his freedom, Alberic lays a deadly curse on the latter. It shall cause every one's death who owns it. Wotan is reluctant to yield this potent talisman, until warned by Erda (the goddess of Earth), and on gaining it the two giants quarrel and Fasolt is slain. Struck by the power of the curse, Wotan turns all his thoughts to saving himself from his menacing fate. Donner clears the air with a thunderstorm, and on his rainbow bridge the gods cross to their castle of refuge. Valhalla.

unnaturally, as it somewhat resembles that apparatus. But it is the gas-engineer's responsibility for the light-effects introduced in the course of a performance which taxes his ingenuity; and, as was the case with the scenic artist's and property-master's departments, the most delicate light-problems arise in the preparations for producing Wagner's works.

In speaking of the scenic rehearsal I referred to the importance of the light-effects in the first act of "Siegfried." It depends for its picturesqueness more on the successful management of these than on any other element in the performance. To "gas" this act is an exceedingly difficult problem, for in its course a great variety of light-effects are introduced, a number of them simultaneously. For instance, no less than three different kinds of lighting come into play together every time Siegfried in the forging scene fans the fire with the bellows. In theatrical parlance the bellows "has to be practically gassed;" which means that the flaring up of the fire and its fitful gleaming upon the surrounding objects must be imitated. The forge is a frame-work, the front, sides, and top being covered. Sunk into the top is a space for a gas-jet, a piece of split gas-pipe and a tube leading into a box immediately underneath, which is filled with lycopodium powder. A person lying under the forge takes a rubber tube, which leads from this box, into his mouth. The gas-jet and the split gas-pipe are worked and used in the same manner as were the jet and burners in the idol in "Ferdinand Cortez"—indeed, the device had been invented for "Siegfried" before the production of Spontini's opera had been decided upon. On the forge is a box painted to resemble a stone. In it are six incandescent electric lights behind a piece of red gelatine. The wire for these runs from a "pocket" in the wing. Near this is also the gas-pocket from which the tube for supplying the gas-jet and split pipe issues and runs along the stage to the hearth. The gas-jet is lighted before the curtain rises. In the wings a man with a mirror stands near an electric light. What occurs when Siegfried pulls the handle of the bellows is as follows:

A man in the wings turns a cock admitting the gas to the tube which feeds the split pipe. The gas when it reaches the split is ignited by the burning jet. At the same time the man under the forge blows through the tube which leads into the box of lycopodium powder. A quantity of this volatile powder is thus blown up out of the box. Coming in contact with the jet and the flames from the split-pipe, it blazes up, the ignited particles at the same time floating over the hearth and thus producing the effect of gaseous flames flickering over a bed of coal or embers and running in lambent undulations from the point at which the current from the bellows fanned the fire. The man who turns on the gas makes at the same time electrical connection with the box of incandescent lights, and these shining through the red gelatine throw a red glare upon Siegfried. At the same time the man with the mirror so manipulates it that the reflection of the electric light runs up and down the wing behind Siegfried. In addition to the lights in the scene of the Forging of the Sword there are several independent light-effects in this act. Among these are the glints of sunshine which play through the foliage of the forest back of Mime's dwelling, and which inspire his terrorized mind with so much dread after the Wanderer's direful prophecy. To produce this effect here and in the Waldweben scene of the next act, two panels of hammered white glass glazed with lead in irregular shapes (one of them arranged on a pin so that it can be slid sidewise over the other and back again), are held in front of an electric light, the sliding panel being moved rapidly to and fro. Then there are the lights thrown on Wotan, the sunlight in the forest, and the white light thrown on Siegfried just before the curtain goes down. The reader will not wonder, in view of the problems presented to the gas-engineer and the number of men employed to carry out their solution, that this functionary prepares for every act a diagram, technically known as a "gas-plot," upon which is a plan of the scene, the positions of all pockets and lights, the names of the men stationed at them, an outline of their duties, and their cues.

Two light-properties in "Faust"—the fire-cup and the spark-emitting sword of Mephistopheles—are worth describing. The fire-cup is a goblet in the bottom of which are chlorate of potash, red fire, and sugar. Above these is suspended a thimble three-quarters filled with sulphuric acid and so delicately balanced that a slight movement causes the acid to drip on the powders and to ignite them, the fumes of the sugar leaving an agreeable taste upon the lips of the singer. The method of causing the sparks to fly from the sword is as follows: Two wire-gauze plates connected with electric wires are placed upon the stage at the points where Mephistopheles and Valentine are to stand. A metal socket is sunk into the heel of the right buskin of each of the singers, and a wire of the same color as their costumes is attached to each socket, wound around the leg and passed through the belt. Standing upon the gauze plates they, as they draw their swords, slip the ends of the wires into the hilts and, when the swords touch electrical connection is made. The flash of Wotan's spear when Siegfried cuts it through with one stroke of his sword is produced by an explosion of gun-cotton in the spear and ignited by electricity, the electric wire passing through the weapon. The red glow of the hilt of the sword in the first act of "Die Walküre" is effected with a red incandescent light in a tin box, painted to represent a knot on the tree and hung on a hook just below the hilt. In the apotheosis in "Faust" the angels are seated on saddles fastened to irons which in turn are attached to slots that are raised and lowered by machinery. Behind them is a sky-blue drop, so that they appear to be floating through the air. The palm-tree in the "Queen of Sheba," which bends like a reed in the sirocco, is made of steel springs and is caused to sway by being pulled by an invisible line from behind the wings. The mirage of the Queen and her suite is produced by the stereopticon.

The stereopticon plays an important part in modern operatic productions, and many realistic effects are due to its introduction. This is notably the case with lightning, clouds, and the rainbow. Before the use of this apparatus lightning was produced by simply flashing magnesium powder in a pan. The powder is still flashed, but the image of the lightning is thrown upon the back drop or other portions of the scenery with the stereopticon. For this purpose a circular wooden frame is used, through which, near the outside edge, a circular hole about three inches in diameter has been cut. This circular hole is placed opposite the lens of the stereopticon. Upon a glass disc which turns in the wooden frame various figures of lightning are painted, so that when the disc is turned the figures are focussed through the circular hole and flashed, vastly enlarged, upon the scenery. The effect is heightened by having various portions of the scenery painted on some transparent substance and flashing a light behind them, so that as the forked lightning plays over the scenery these portions seem luridly illumined by it. Cloud effects are produced in the same manner, the image being usually thrown upon gauze drops. And the sand-storm in the "Queen of Sheba" is also a stereoscopic effect. The rainbow apparatus consists of a small five-eighths of an inch broad span, composed of blue glass, steel, and a watch-spring, and two adjustable glass prisms. The stereopticon lens magnifies the span to a length of sixty feet, the image being colored by the prisms.

Lightning implies thunder. The old theatrical device for imitating the artillery of the storm was to shake a sheet of iron. This is now almost obsolete in theatrical establishments of the first rank. The so-called "rabbit-hutch" has been substituted for it. This contrivance while far more complicated is also far more effective than the sheet of iron. With one side against the wall of the third fly-gallery, prompt-side, stands a cabinet with six slanting shelves closed by doors which open sideways toward the wall. On each of these shelves are half a dozen cannon-balls, prevented from rolling out only by the closed doors. From under the cabinet runs a broad zinc-lined trough, which, at a distance of eighteen feet from the cabinet, is led through the flooring and then in two long slants to the floor below. At short intervals in the trough are little inequalities of surface. A rope places one of the two men who work the apparatus in communication with the stage. Suppose there are to be two long, loud rolls of thunder. The stage-manager pulls the rope, the man at its end on the second fly-gallery gives the word to the man at

ARGUMENT.

ACT I. The rising curtain reveals a meadow near Antwerp, on which King Henry has assembled the nobles of Brabant. Count Telramund, whose offer of marriage had been refused by Elsa, Princess of Brabant, seeks to avenge himself by accusing her of having murdered her younger brother, in order that she might share the rule of the country with a secret lover. Elsa appears before the King, declares her innocence, and tells of a vision in which a knight appeared to her, promising to be her champion. The Herald's first call for her knight remains unanswered, but after the second a knight appears on a boat drawn by a swan. After making Elsa a promise never to ask him who he is or whence he came, he vanquishes Telramund, but generously spares his life.

ACT II. Telramund and his wife Ortrud are before the palace. The two plot revenge, and Ortrud, who is a witch, knows that if she can induce Elsa to ask Lohengrin the forbidden question, he will have to leave her. So when Elsa, is about to enter the church, she takes her aside, and hints that Lohengrin is a sorcerer. Subsequently Telramund interrupts the bridal pair and accuses Lohengrin of witchcraft, but is obliged to yield to the popular indignation, and the bridal procession moves on.

ACT III. Scene at the opening of Act III., represents the bridal chamber. The evil insinuations of Ortrud leave Elsa no peace, and, notwithstanding her husband's warning, she yields to her anxious curiosity and asks the fatal question about his name and home. Hardly has she uttered these words, when Telramund rushes in to assassinate Lohengrin, who, however, passes his own sword through his enemy. The scene changes to the same meadow seen in Act I. The body of Telramund is brought before the King and Lohengrin announces that he is obliged to depart, and that he is one of the knights of the holy Grail whose mission is to assist innocent mortals in distress, but who can only do so on condition of concealing their origin. The swan now arrives to take him away, when Ortrud advances and announces that the swan is no one else than Elsa's brother, converted by Ortrud's magic arts into a swan. Lohengrin's prayer changes him back to human form, and a dove having taken its place, the knight departs.

with this gallery, the work of painting begins, the bridge being lowered as occasion requires. Frequently, however, the canvas is hung on pulleys from one of the gridiron beams and gradually lowered, the bridge remaining suspended between the prompt-side of the first fly-gallery and the op-p-side, thus forming a convenient crossing from one side of the house to the other for those at work in the upper stories, who would otherwise have to descend to the stage floor, cross it, and ascend several flights of stairs on the other side. Until within about a fortnight of the production of an opera or music-drama the work of preparation goes on in the buildings on either side of the stage and flies, and is not until that seemingly late period transferred to these latter.

At the production of the work the audience, comfortably seated, watches the performance unfold itself so smoothly that it suggests no idea of preliminary labor. This is as it should be. For as an actor must cause the result of his art to seem nature itself, so the theatrical manager must cause the action and its scenic surroundings to appear the spontaneous product of the time in which the drama or opera plays. We are apt to credit only the actor with the genius of simulating nature. As a matter of fact, the principle upon which he proceeds governs every detail of a theatrical or—to remain by the subject in hand—an operatic production. What the actor strives for, the manager, stage-manager, scene-painter, property-master, gas-engineer, master machinist, musical conductor, chorus, and principal singers are striving for. Each in his respective department is endeavouring to simulate nature. I emphasize simulate, because the simulation of nature as distinguished from the actual reproduction of nature is the peculiar province of stage art. It is a fact that a real tree upon the stage looks less like a real tree from the auditorium than a tree painted upon a piece of canvas; and that with a bit of canvas and a little paint the scene-painter can, at the expense of a few dollars, produce a Persian rug looking costlier and more like the real article than would an actual Persian rug costing a thousand dollars. What in real life would be exaggeration becomes on the stage perfect simulation of nature. The actor's natural bloom would be a ghostly pallor in the glare of the footlights, so that he is obliged to rouge his cheeks in order that their color may look natural. And as in this case the look of nature is produced by exaggeration, so it is with everything pertaining to stage art—voice, gesture, costume, scenery, "properties," light-effects. They must all, so to speak, be rouged. A stage production, to be successful, must be prepared with this principle always in view. It can easily be traced through the work going on behind the scenes of an opera-house.

When Napoleon III., before declaring war upon Prussia, asked one of his ministers if everything were in readiness for the army to move on Berlin, the latter replied: "To the last button on the last gaiter." Unless everything pertaining to an operatic performance is in readiness to the last, papier-maché shield for the last "super," there will be an operatic fiasco. The operatic host must be placed on a war footing. Some idea of the labor this involves may be formed from the statement that at the Metropolitan Opera-House it took from August, 1887, until January, 1888, to mobilize this host for the conquest of Mexico under "Ferdinand Cortez," a period of about the same length as that usually consumed at large opera-houses in preparing a work for production.

On the 1st of August, 1887, the managing director handed the libretto to the members of his staff. They immediately set to work to exhaust the bibliography of the episode lying at the basis of the action as thoroughly as though they intended to write a history. For they knew the production would have to be as far as possible a materialization of a page from history. They found the Despatches of Cortez and Charnay's work on Mexico of especial value, the illustrations in the latter suggesting designs for scenery, costumes, weapons, and other properties. The scenic artist and costumer came almost at the very outset of their investigations upon stumbling blocks in the way of "putting on" their share in the production with historical accuracy. The buildings in which part of the opera plays were a mass of granite, and their faithful reproduction would have been inconsistent with the desired spectacular effect. The costumer, who was obliged to study both the Spanish and Mexican costumes of the period, discovered that the garbs of the Mexican women were not picturesque, while those of the Mexican priests were indecent. These matters were exhaustively discussed at a cabinet meeting in the managing director's office. It was decided, so far as the unbroken mass of granite and the costumes of the Mexican priests and women were concerned, to abandon historical accuracy, and, while retaining the architectural forms, to introduce some colors and to use the costumes of a somewhat later period. Here we observe that stage art demanded a sacrifice of historical accuracy, but that the semblance of the latter was maintained as far as possible. It became necessary to "theatreize" or idealize history. This is one of the most delicate problems presented to a conscientious theatrical manager. The solution is always in the line of the principle governing all theatrical productions—simulation. I am reminded here of a passage in Ruskin's "Modern Painters" to the effect that the true artist sees nature not as it really is, but idealized through his artist-imagination, and puts upon canvas only what his artist-soul allows his memory to retain. Similarly, those concerned in placing a work like "Ferdinand Cortez" upon the stage cannot be mere photographers of history.

On the Paint Bridge.

Meanwhile the property-master had made out a list of the articles to be manufactured in his department. He had not been hampered by the problem of historical accuracy. He found drawings of Mexican antiquities from which he made sketches of the Mexican implements of war and peace to be used in the opera, and from a genuine Mexican relic of that period, seen by chance in the show window of a store, he obtained his scheme for the principal property in the work, the image of the god Talepulka. He found he could have all these historically correct, except that he did not think it necessary to go to the length of decorating the idol with a paste made from a mixture of grain with human blood. A problem arose, however, when he considered the construction of the idol. He ascertained from the libretto that the idol and the back wall of the temple are shattered by an explosion, and that, just before the catastrophe, flames flash from the idol's eyes and mouth. He consulted with the gas-engineer, who had already considered the matter, and concluded that it would be most practical to produce the flames by means of gas supplied through a hose from the wings.

The property-master then made the following note in his plot book: "Flames leap up high from the heathen image—the gas-hose must be detached and drawn into the wings immediately afterward so as not to be visible when the image has fallen apart." The necessity of having the gas-hose detached determined the method of shattering the idol. It is a theatrical principle that a mechanical property should be so constructed that it can be worked by the smallest possible number of men. This principle was kept in view when the method of shattering Talepulka was determined upon. The god was divided from top to bottom into two irregular pieces. These were held together by a line, invisible from the audience, which was tied around the image near the pedestal. Another line, leading into the wings, was attached to the side of the top of one of the pieces. At the first report of the explosion a man concealed behind the pedestal, whose duty it also is to detach the gas-hose, cuts the line fastened around the idol, and the pieces slightly separate, so that the image seems to have cracked in two jagged pieces. At the next report a man in the wings pulls at the other line and the pieces fall apart.

Lecture Recitals

at the Piano,

BY

WALTER DAMROSCH,

Berkeley Lyceum,

WEST 44th ST., NEAR FIFTH AVE.

During the last season, Mr. Damrosch delivered over one hundred Lecture Recitals on Wagner's Nibelungen Dramas (principally to private classes) in New York, Brooklyn, Boston and Lenox. At the request of many he has decided to give them in public this winter.

At these Lectures Mr. Damrosch takes up the music in detail, playing the greater portion upon the piano, translating the text and explaining the many musical motives and their relation to the poem.

The Course will comprise eight Lecture Recitals, in which the Trilogy will be divided as follows:

Monday Afternoon, Dec. 10, "Das Rheingold." Monday Afternoon, Dec. 17, "Die Walküre, Act I." Monday Afternoon, Dec. 24, "Die Walküre, Acts, II, III." Monday Afternoon Dec. 31, "Siegfried, Act I." Monday Afternoon Jan. 7, "Siegfried, Acts II, III." Monday Afternoon Jan. 14, "Götterdämmerung, Act I." Monday Afternoon Jan. 21, "Götterdämmerung, Act II." Monday Afternoon Jan. 28, "Götterdämmerung, Act III." Beginning at three o'clock.

Price of Subscription for the Course, Six Dollars. Single admission, One Dollar.

Subscription Tickets can be obtained at the Box Office of the Metropolitan Opera House, now open.

MUSIC AMONG THE GREEKS.

"Music is pursued, not only as an alleviation of past toil * * * it has a power of forming character." (Aristotle).

"Song is to mortals of all things the sweetest." (Musaeus).

The Greeks in the flower of their culture gave to music a higher rank both in education and amusement than it has ever held since. The place, power, and value of music are most interestingly discoursed upon by Aristotle in his Politics. He argues in this connection that there is a certain kind of education which is to be valued because it is noble and liberal (not useful), and will enable us to take delight in pleasures of an elevated kind; under this head he places music saying: All men "agree that music is one of the "pleasantest things, whether with or without song." He goes further than this, claiming that music is not alone a recreation; he states distinctly: "It has power to form character," explaining his assertion thus: "Music conduces to virtue on the "ground that it can form our minds "and habituate us to true pleasures, "as our bodies are made by gymnastics to be of a certain character."

Aristotle's own words, as yet scarcely known in the world of music, are immortal, and should be familiar to every musician. Hear what he says of this noble art:

"It is clear then that there are "branches of learning and education "which we must study with a view "to the enjoyment of leisure, and "these are to be valued for their own "sake; whereas those kinds of knowledge which are useful in business "are to be deemed necessary, and "exist for the sake of other things. "Therefore our fathers admitted "music into education, not on the "ground either of its necessity or "utility, for it is not necessary in the "same manner as reading and writing, which are useful in money-"making, and in the management of "a household; nor again like gymnastics which give health and "strength. There remains then the "use of music for intellectual enjoyment in leisure, which appears to "have been the reason of its introduction, this being one of the ways "in which it is thought that a free-"man should pass his leisure."

"With good reason music is introduced into social gatherings, because it makes the hearts of men "glad; so that on this ground alone "we may assume that the young "ought to be trained in it. For in-"nocent pleasures are not only in "harmony with the perfect end of life, "but they also provide relaxation.

"And whereas men rarely attain "the end, but often rest by the way "and amuse themselves, . . it may "be well for them at times to find a "refreshment in music. . . Since "then music is a pleasure, and virtue consists in rejoicing and loving, "and hating aright, there is clearly "nothing which we are so much concerned to acquire and cultivate as "the power of forming right judgments, and of taking delight in good "dispositions and noble actions. "Rhythm and melody supply imitations of anger and gentleness, also "of courage and temperance, and of "virtues and vices in general, which "hardly fall short of the actual affections, as we know from our own "experiences, for in listening to such "strains our souls undergo a change.

"The habit of feeling pleasure or "pain at mere representations is not "far removed from the same feeling "about realities."

Aristotle goes on to enumerate the different kinds of music, classifying them according to the moral effect. Some kinds of music, he says, "make men sad and grave . . "others enfeeble the mind, others, "again, produce a moderate and set-"tled temper, which appears to be "the peculiar effect of the Dorian; "the Phrygian inspires enthusiasm. "The same principles apply to "rhythms: some have a character of "rest, others of motion, and of these "latter again, some have a more "vulgar, others a nobler movement. "Enough has therefore been said to "show that music has a power of "forming the character, and should "therefore be introduced into the "education of the young."

As to musical education he says farther: "They who are to be "judges must also be performers. "The right measure will be attained "if students of music stop short of "the arts which are practised in pro-"fessional contests, and do not seek "to acquire those fantastic marvels "of execution which are now the "fashion. Let the young pursue "their studies until they are able to "feel delight in noble melodies and "rhythms, and not merely in that "common part of music in which "every slave or child, or even some "animals, find pleasure."

It is curious to note the influence ascribed to certain musical instruments. The flute, for instance, was branded as having a bad moral effect; Aristotle says "it is too exciting!" The Lydian harp came in the same category.

Purification was one of the offices of music. Aristotle mentions the use of certain "mystic melodies, which "bring healing and purification to the soul."

While the effect of the stage upon the public has nowhere been more fully recognized than in Greece (the cradle of the music-drama), we find in Aristotle the following powerful statement of the reverse action—the influence of the audience on the character of the performance and performers. "The vulgarity of the "spectator tends to lower the char-"acter of the music and therefore of "the performers; they look to him "—he makes them what they are, "and fashions even their bodies by "the movements which he expects "them to exhibit."

And all this is more than two thousand years old! Here we find expressed by a master of the art, thoughts which we imagined only those of the last quarter century had rightly grasped. And what has been said in our own day and generation of this mighty civilizer and educator—Music. George Eliot writes, "I "agree with you as to the inherent "superiority 'of music' . . painting "and sculpture are 'but an idealizing "of our existence.' Music 'arches "over this existence with another and "'diviner.'"

BEHIND THE SCENES OF AN OPERA-HOUSE.

BY GUSTAV KOBBE.

Soon after the curtain had risen on the first performance of Wagner's "Parsifal," at Baireuth, in July, 1882, my attention was suddenly attracted by a peculiar excrescence on one of the rocks in the left foreground of the stage. Gradually, as I looked, the excrescence assumed the shape of a human head, and some minutes afterward I was able to distinguish the face of Wagner himself outlined against the piece of rock scenery. At first I supposed he had ventured out too far from behind the scenes in order to observe the effect of his last music-drama upon the audience. But this supposition was dispelled by the circumstance that he barely looked toward the auditorium. He seemed rather to be watching the singers on the stage. The face remained in view until the panoramic change of scene from the forest to the Castle of the Grail, It struck me as a curious circumstance that although I frequently looked at the face during the progress of the scene, it did not grow into any bolder relief against the rock, but remained almost as flat as though it had been painted into the scenery. Afterward I asked a number of friends in the audience if they had seen what I had. They had not; nor had others of whom they made inquiries. I was beginning to think that the appearance of Wagner's face against the rock was a freak of mirage, resulting perhaps from the positions of some of the lights behind the scenes, when I mentioned the matter to one of the principal singers in the cast. He manifested surprise, not at what I had discovered, but at my having discovered it. He then told me that weeks before the production of "Parsifal," Wagner had chalked little crosses on the stage to indicate the exact spots where he wanted the singers to stand and had also drawn lines to show the direction in which they were to move from one point to another; and had himself drilled them in every movement. At the dress rehearsals and during the performance he had watched them, except during the first scene of the first act, from behind the scenes, in order to observe whether or not they closely followed his directions." Discovering that in the scene referred to he could not command a full view of the stage from any point at which he was entirely hidden from the audience, he had se ected the place where I had noticed him, because there, when the stage was lighted, his complexion and the coloring of the scenery almost blended, and he considered himself safe from detection. I was much impressed at this incident. For it furnished a clue to the vast amount of labor which, unknown to the public, preceded the production of "Parsifal." If one detail in the performance had necessitated so much thought, drilling, and watchfulness, how much of these, beyond the most liberal estimate of the public, must have been developed during the long period of preparation. As I thought the matter over, the energy expended in the performance of the work dwindled into insignificance compared with that which must have been called into play while the work was preparing for production.

Some years later, amid entirely different surroundings—at the Metropolitan Opera-House, New York, during the cathedral scene in Meyerbeer's "Prophet"—I was reminded of my Baireuth experience. In the scene of "The Prophet" a brilliant pageant unfolded itself as smoothly as if it were regulated by a machine controlled in turn by the rhythm of the Coronation March; for each division of the procession came upon the stage with the first beat of the measure at which it made its appearance and kept step with the music. The stage-manager seemed to have calculated the exact interval of time which would be occupied by each division in crossing and going up the stage, while the soldiers who brought up the rear disappeared behind the scenes with the last chord of the march.

It then occurred to me that an audience sees but a small portion of a theatre. What goes on in the space above, beneath, behind, and on either side of the stage? Are not the unseen regions of a theatre more interesting perhaps than those that are seen? These questions arose in my mind during the performance of "The Prophet," as they had at Baireuth. In that instance I had been unable to follow up the subject. In the latter, however, I was more fortunate. For, through the courtesy of the managing director, I was enabled to penetrate the innermost recesses of an opera-house of the first rank, an establishment, a tour of discovery behind whose scenes reveals all the resources of the modern stage; inasmuch as one finds there not only everything pertaining to a theatre, but also the numerous and varied contrivances which have been devised for the production of the works of the modern German repertoire. This is especially true of the Metropolitan Opera-House, because every article used in the performances at that house is manufactured on the premises, and because in the special line of mechanical contrivances needed for the production of Wagner's works, now so prominently before the public, Yankee ingenuity has grafted many improvements on German designs, so that our opera-house, though young in years, has in stage craft a longer head than the old-established German opera-houses.

The regions in which the labor of preparing a musico-dramatic work for production goes on are a veritable bee-hive of activity. They embrace besides the rooms of the heads of the various departments—musical conductor, stage-manager, scenic artist, costumer, property-master, gas-engineer, and master carpenter—those in which their ideas are materialized. Connected, for instance, with the property department is a modelling-room, a casting-room, two rooms in which such properties as flowers, grass-mats, and birds are manufactured, two armories, and three or four apartments in which properties are stored—but this is taking the reader a little too far behind the footlights for the present. Before we begin our voyage of discovery it is well to box the theatrical compass.

The stage, properly speaking, is that portion of a theatre which can be seen from the auditorium, and the space on either side, behind the proscenium, utilized in shifting the "wings," as the side-scenes are called, when a scene is changing. The stage is width-wise divided into five parts. The side to the extreme left of the spectator is called the prompt-side. The prompter stands there in theatres in which there is no prompter's box. Half-way between the prompt-side and the point which marks half the width of the stage is the prompt-centre. Then there are the centre proper, and, corresponding with the prompt-centre and prompt-side, the opposite-prompt-centre and the opposite-prompt-side, or, as they are always called in theatrical parlance, the o-p-centre and o-p-side The depth of the stage is divided into "entrances" according to the number of wings. Thus the "first-prompt-entrance" is between the proscenium and the first wing on the prompt-side. Corresponding with it on the opposite side is the "first o-p-entrance." All these divisions and their appellations hold good not only of width and depth, but also of height. For instance, the prompt-centre extends from the floor of the stage to the beams far above—a height sometimes of 160 feet—to which are attached the pulleys and huge leverage wheels for running the ropes that lower and raise the drop-scenes.

Everything above the proscenium arch is summed up in the term "flies," a word more frequently misused than any other theatrical term, and wrongly defined even in the principal dictionaries of the English language. The uninitiated almost invariably use this term in speaking of the strips of canvas painted to resemble sky, foliage, arches, or the ceilings of interiors suspended across the stage above the wings. These are the "borders," and form but a small portion of the flies, which include the border-lights (rows of gas-jets running across the flies and illuminating the borders), innumerable ropes, cleets, pulleys, the beams to which these last are attached, and the fly-galleries on either side, from the lowest of which the drop-scenes and borders are worked. These galleries vary in number according to the size of the house. In opera-houses of the first rank they are four in number, so that the flies are four stories high. Then, from the prompt-side across to the o-p-side, stretch, a story higher, the beams already referred to. These in the aggregate have two names, according to the position of the person speaking of them. Looking upward from the floor of the stage, he would call them the gridiron; standing on them, he would speak of them as the rigging-loft. The drops in large houses are about 56 feet high, and as they are raised, not rolled up, the space from the top of the borders, on a line with the first fly-gallery, to the gridiron is about 80 feet high, giving room for the drop and 24 feet of rope. There are five ropes to each drop—the prompt, prompt-centre, centre, o-p-centre, and o-p rope. These run from the gridiron down to the first fly-gallery, where they are fastened around cleets and from where they are worked.

While the floor of the stage runs from the footlights to the rear wall of the building, the entire depth is rarely utilized, because a section extending about eight feet forward from the rear wall is reserved for the paint-room. The floor of the paint-room is a platform called the paint-bridge, which extends across the stage and can be raised and lowered between the floor of the stage and the first fly-gallery. The canvas to be painted having been hung in position so that its top is level

ARGUMENT.

I. AFRICANE.

Vasco di Gama, a young officer in the Portuguese navy, convinced of the existence of lands hitherto unknown to his countrymen, applies to the Royal Council of Portugal for means wherewith to prosecute his researches; producing, in support of his arguments, two slaves, purchased by him in an African Slave Market, whose features, garb, etc., prove them to be of a race unknown to Europeans. The superstitious ignorance of the Council leads, not only to the refusal of Vasco's application, but to his being forthwith arrested and thrown into a dungeon, his captivity being shared by his two slaves. Selika and Nelusko, the former of whom has become deeply enamored of her master, while she herself is passionately beloved by her companion in bondage, Nelusko. Vasco, however, is soon released from prison, owing to the zealous intervention of Ines (now the wife of Don Pedro), but between whom and Vasco a deep and enduring attachment had long existed. Don Pedro has meantime become possessed of Vasco's papers, plans, etc., and having obtained from the king the command of a ship, he sets sail, hoping to carry out Vasco's projected discoveries, and thereby reap the advantages to which the great navigator's genius and enterprise had so justly entitled him. Don Pedro takes with him, on his voyage, his wife Ines, and the two slaves, Selika and Nelusko, whom he has purchased of their former master. As the ship approaches the Cape of Storms, it is overtaken by a vessel carrying the same colors, and commanded by none other than Vasco in person, whom an unexpected turn of fortune has enabled to fit out a ship for himself. Notwithstanding their mutual hate, Vasco comes on board Don Pedro's ship for the purpose of cautioning him against the numerous dangers with which navigation in those Indies is fraught. A quarrel, however, ensues, during which, in verification of Vasco's warning, the ship, (through the machinations of Nelusko, to whom the steering of the vessel has been entrusted) is suddenly boarded by Indians, who, despite an obstinate resistance, take the entire crew prisoners, and carry them away to a land rich in every tropical beauty, and of which the captive slave Selika now proves to be the queen, she having formerly been captured by Africans, on an occasion when, tempest tossed, her bark had drifted far from her native shores. Don Pedro and his companions are, in accordance with a law of the country, immediately put to death. Selika, to save the life of her beloved Vasco, informs her subjects that a marriage had been contracted between herself and the young Portuguese, during her captivity in Europe. Vasco, overcome by gratitude, is on the point of forgetting his love for Ines, when of a sudden the hapless maiden is heard as she and her attendants are being led to the sacrifice, bewailing her sad fate, and bidding an eternal adieu to her native land. The well-known accents at once revive in Vasco's breast all his former affections for Ines. Selika, heart-broken on finding that her ardent love for Vasco is unreturned, at first determines on signal vengeance, but her better nature subsequently gains the ascendant, and she nobly restores the two lovers to liberty. Despair, however, takes possession of the unhappy queen, and, unable to endure the torments of unrequited passion, she resolves to end her days by inhaling the perfume of the dread mancanilla tree, the exhalations of whose foliage, according to their traditional properties, lull her into a dreamy trance, from the ecstatic visions of which she is awakened by the signal gun, announcing the departure of Vasco and his beloved Ines, to whose happiness, Don Pedro being dead, there is now no longer a barrier. Recalled to the terrible reality of her position, Selika utters a passionate farewell to Vasco, and overcome by the poisonous emanations of the fatal tree, beneath whose death-dealing branches she is still extended, the unhappy queen expires in the arms of her faithful and sorrow-stricken Nelusko.

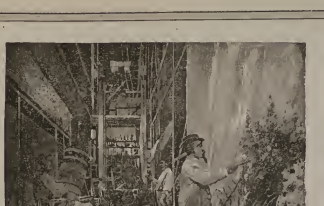
with this gallery, the work of painting begins, the bridge being lowered as occasion requires. Frequently, however, the canvas is hung on pulleys from one of the gridiron beams and gradually lowered, the bridge remaining suspended between the prompt-side of the first fly-gallery and the op-side, thus forming a convenient crossing from one side of the house to the other for those at work in the upper stories, who would otherwise have to descend to the stage floor, cross it, and ascend several flights of stairs on the other side. Until within about a fortnight of the production of an opera or music-drama the work of preparation goes on in the buildings on either side of the stage and flies, and is not until that seemingly late period transferred to these latter.

At the production of the work the audience, comfortably seated, watches the performance unfold itself so smoothly that it suggests no idea of preliminary labor. This is as it should be. For as an actor must cause the result of his art to seem nature itself, so the theatrical manager must cause the action and its scenic surroundings to appear the spontaneous product of the time in which the drama or opera plays. We are apt to credit only the actor with the genius of simulating nature. As a matter of fact, the principle upon which he proceeds governs every detail of a theatrical or—to remain by the subject in hand—an operatic production. What the actor strives for, the manager, stage-manager, scene-painter, property-master, gas-engineer, master machinist, musical conductor, chorus, and principal singers are striving for. Each in his respective department is endeavouring to simulate nature. I emphasize simulate, because the simulation of nature as distinguished from the actual reproduction of nature is the peculiar province of stage art. It is a fact that a real tree upon the stage looks less like a real tree from the auditorium than a tree painted upon a piece of canvas; and that with a bit of canvas and a little paint the scene-painter can, at the expense of a few dollars, produce a Persian rug looking costlier and more like the real article than would an actual Persian rug costing a thousand dollars. What in real life would be exaggeration becomes on the stage perfect simulation of nature. The actor's natural bloom would be a ghostly pallor in the glare of the footlights, so that he is obliged to rouge his cheeks in order that their color may look natural. And as in this case the look of nature is produced by exaggeration, so it is with everything pertaining to stage art—voice, gesture, costume, scenery, "properties," light-effects. They must all, so to speak, be rouged. A stage production, to be successful, must be pursued with this principle always in view. It can easily be traced through the work going on behind the scenes of an opera-house.

When Napoleon III., before declaring war upon Prussia, asked one of his ministers if everything were in readiness for the army to move on Berlin, the latter replied: "To the last button on the last gaiter." Unless everything pertaining to an operatic performance is in readiness to the last papier-maché shield for the last "super," there will be an operatic Sedan. The operatic host must be placed on a war footing. Some idea of the labor this involves may be formed from the statement that at the Metropolitan Opera-House it took from August, 1887, until January, 1888, to mobilize this host for the conquest of Mexico under "Ferdinand Cortez," a period of about the same length as that usually consumed at large opera-houses in preparing a work for production.

On the 1st of August, 1887, the managing director handed the libretto to the members of his staff. They immediately set to work to exhaust the bibliography of the episode lying at the basis of the action as thoroughly as though they intended to write a history. For they knew the production would have to be as far as possible a materialization of a page from history. They found the Despatches of Cortez and Charnay's work on Mexico of especial value, the illustrations in the latter suggesting designs for scenery, costumes, weapons, and other properties. The scenic artist and costumer came almost at the very outset of their investigations upon stumbling blocks in the way of "putting on" their share in the production with historical accuracy. The buildings in which part of the opera plays were a mass of granite, and their faithful reproduction would have been inconsistent with the desired spectacular effect. The costumer, who was obliged to study both the Spanish and Mexican costumes of the period, discovered that the garbs of the Mexican women were not picturesque, while those of the Mexican priests were indecent. These matters were exhaustively discussed at a cabinet meeting in the maganging director's office. It was decided, so far as the unbroken mass of granite and the costumes of the Mexican priests and women were concerned, to abandon historical accuracy, and, while retaining the architectural forms, to introduce some colors and to use the costumes of a somewhat later period. Here we observe that stage art demanded a sacrifice of historical accuracy, but that the semblance of the latter was maintained as far as possible. It became necessary to "theatreize" or idealize history. This is one of the most delicate problems presented to a conscientious theatrical manager. The solution is always in the line of the principle governing all theatrical productions—simulation. I am reminded here of a passage in Ruskin's "Modern Painters" to the effect that the true artist sees nature not as it really is, but idealized through his artist-imagination, and puts upon canvas only what his artist-soul allows his memory to retain. Similarly, those concerned in placing a work like "Ferdinand Cortez" upon the stage cannot be mere photographers of history.



On the Paint Bridge

Meanwhile the property-master had made out a list of the articles to be manufactured in his department. He had not been hampered by the problem of historical accuracy. He found drawings of Mexican antiquities from which he made sketches of the Mexican implements of war and peace to be used in the opera, and from a genuine Mexican relic of that period, seen by chance in the show window of a store, he obtained his scheme for the principal property in the work, the image of the god Talepulka. He found he could have all these historically correct, except that he did not think it necessary to go to the length of decorating the idol with a paste made from a mixture of grain with human blood. A problem arose, however, when he considered the construction of the idol. As ascertained from the libretto that the idol and the back wall of the temple are shattered by an explosion, and that, just before the catastrophe, flames flash from the idol's eyes and mouth. He consulted with the gas-engineer, who had already considered the matter, and concluded that it would be most practical to produce the flames by means of gas supplied through a hose from the wings.

The property-master then made the following note in his plot book: "Flames leap up high from the heathen image—the gas-hose must be detached and drawn into the wings immediately afterward so as not to be visible when the image has fallen apart." The necessity of having the gas-hose detached determined the method of shattering the idol. It is a theatrical principle that a mechanical property should be so constructed that it can be worked by the smallest possible number of men. This principle was kept in view when the method of shattering Talepulka was determined upon. The god was divided from top to bottom into two irregular pieces. These were held together by a line, invisible from the audience, which was tied around the image near the pedestal. Another line, leading into the wings, was attached to the side of the top of one of the pieces. At the first report of the explosion a man concealed behind the pedestal, whose duty it also is to detach the gas-hose, cuts the line fastened around the idol, and the pieces slightly separate, so that the image seems to have cracked in two jagged pieces. At the next report a man in the wings pulls at the other line and the pieces fall apart.

MUSIC AMONG THE GREEKS.

"Music is pursued, not only as an alleviation of past toil * * * it has a power of forming character." (Aristotle).

"Song is to mortals of all things the sweetest." (Musæus).

The Greeks in the flower of their culture gave to music a higher rank both in education and amusement than it has ever held since. The place, power, and value of music are most interestingly discoursed upon by Aristotle in his Politics. He argues in this connection that there is a certain kind of education which is to be valued because it is noble and liberal (not useful), and will enable us to take delight in pleasures of an elevated kind: under this head he places music saying: All men "agree that music is one of the "pleasantest things, whether with or without song." He goes further than this, claiming that music is not alone a recreation; he states distinctly: "It has power to form character," explaining his assertion thus: "Music conduces to virtue on the "ground that it can form our minds "and habituate us to true pleasures, "as our bodies are made by gymnastics to be of a certain character."

Aristotle's own words, as yet scarcely known in the world of music, are immortal, and should be familiar to every musician. Hear what he says of this noble art:

"It is clear then that there are "branches of learning and education "which we must study with a view "to the enjoyment of leisure, and "these are to be valued for their own "sake; whereas those kinds of knowledge which are useful in business "are to be deemed necessary, and "exist for the sake of other things. "Therefore our fathers admitted "music into education, not on the "ground either of its necessity or "utility, for it is not necessary in the "same manner as reading and writing, which are useful in money-"making, and in the management of "a household; nor again like gymnastics which give health and "strength. There remains then the "use of music for intellectual en-"joyment in leisure, which appears to "have been the reason of its introduction, this being one of the ways "in which it is thought that a free-"man should pass his leisure."

"With good reason music is introduced into social gatherings, be-"cause it makes the hearts of men "glad; so that on this ground alone "we may assume that the young "ought to be trained in it. For innocent pleasures are not only in "harmony with the perfect end of life," but they also provide relaxation,

"And whereas men rarely attain "the end, but often rest by the way "and amuse themselves, . . it may "be well for them at times to find a "refreshment in music. . . Since "then music is a pleasure, and virtue consists in rejoicing and loving, "and hating aright, there is clearly "nothing which we are so much concerned to acquire and cultivate as "the power of forming right judgments, and of taking delight in good "dispositions and noble actions. "Rhythm and melody supply imitations of anger and gentleness, also "of courage and temperance, and of "virtues and vices in general, which "hardly fall short of the actual affections, as we know from our own "experiences, for in listening to such "strains our souls undergo a change. "The habit of feeling pleasure or "pain at mere representations is not "far removed from the same feeling "about realities."

Aristotle goes on to enumerate the different kinds of music, classifying them according to the moral effect. Some kinds of music, he says, "make men sad and grave . . "others enfeeble the mind, others "again, produce a moderate and settled temper, which appears to be "the peculiar effect of the Dorian; "the Phrygian inspires enthusiasm. "The same principles apply to "rhythms: some have a character of "rest, others of motion, and of these "latter again, some have a more "vulgar, others a nobler movement. "Enough has therefore been said to "show that music has a power of "forming the character, and should "therefore be introduced into the "education of the young."

As to musical education he says farther: "They who are to be "judges must also be performers. "The right measure will be attained "if students of music stop short of "the arts which are practised in pro-"fessional contests, and do not seek "to acquire those fantastic marvels "of execution which are now the "fashion. Let the young pursue "their studies until they are able to "feel delight in noble melodies and "rhythms, and not merely in that "common part of music in which "every slave or child, or even some "animals, find pleasure."

It is curious to note the influence ascribed to certain musical instruments. The flute, for instance, was branded as having a bad moral effect; Aristotle says "it is too exciting!" The Lydian harp came in the same category.

Purification was one of the offices of music. Aristotle mentions the use of certain "mystic melodies, which "bring healing and purification to the soul."

While the effect of the stage upon the public has nowhere been more fully recognized than in Greece (the cradle of the music-drama), we find in Aristotle the following powerful statement of the reverse action—the influence of the audience on the character of the performance and performers. "The vulgarity of the "spectator tends to lower the char-"acter of the music and therefore of "the performers; they look to him "—he makes them what they are, "and fashions even their bodies by "the movements which he expects "them to exhibit."

And all this is more than two thousand years old! Here we find expressed by a master of the art, thoughts which we imagined only those of the last quarter century had rightly grasped. And what has been said in our own day and generation of this mighty civilizer and educator —Music. George Eliot writes, "I "agree with you as to the inherent "superiority 'of music' . painting "and sculpture are 'but an idealizing "of our existence.' Music 'arches "over this existence with another and "'diviner.'"

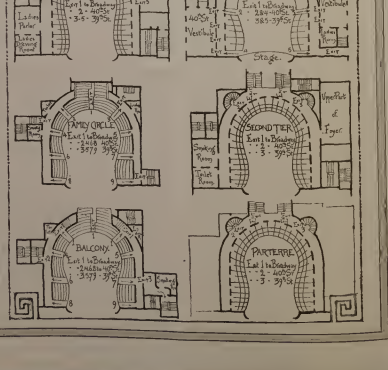
WAGNER ON MOZART.

It may be well to correct the absurd notion which Wagner's enemies have assiduously spread that he looked upon Mozart with the contempt of a superior genius. On the contrary, he says, in his "Oper und Drama"—"I point out to you again the glorious composer, in whom music was all that she can be in man, when she, in the fullness of her nature, is music wholly, and nothing but music. Look upon Mozart! Was he the less a musician because he was only thoroughly a musician, and was not and did not wish to be anything else but a musician? Look at "Don Giovanni." Where has music assumed such infinitely pure individuality, and where has she known so surely and directly to delineate character in richest and overflowing fullness as here?"

WEBER ANECDOTES.

One day Weber received an invitation from the Princess Maria Paulowna, to come to Weimar, and teach her some of his works, including the sonata in C which he had dedicated to her. On this subject he subsequently wrote to a friend: "The princess often says that she does not believe she will ever play the sonata properly as long as she lives. If she were not a princess, I should be at liberty to tell her that I fully agree with her."

At his publisher's office in Offenbach Weber for the first time saw an autograph of Mozart's, and his behavior on this occasion touchingly expressed his unbounded veneration for Mozart's genius. He laid it carefully on the table, and on bended knees pressed his forehead and lips to it, gazed at it with tears in his eyes, and then handed it back with the words, "Happy the paper on which his hand has rested."



From Scribner's Magazine, October 1888.

BEHIND THE SCENES OF AN OPERA-HOUSE.

BY GUSTAV KOBBE.

SOON after the curtain had risen on the first performance of Wagner's "Parsifal," at Baireuth, in July, 1882, my attention was suddenly attracted by a peculiar excrescence on one of the rocks in the left foreground of the stage. Gradually, as I looked, the excrescence assumed the shape of a human head, and some minutes afterward I was able to distinguish the face of Wagner himself outlined against the piece of rock scenery. At first I supposed he had ventured out too far from behind the scenes in order to observe the effect of his last music-drama upon the audience. But this supposition was dispelled by the circumstance that he rarely looked toward the auditorium. He seemed rather to be watching the singers on the stage. The face remained in view until the panoramic change of scene from the forest to the Castle of the Grail. It struck me as a curious circumstance that although I frequently looked at the face during the progress of the scene, it did not grow into any bolder relief against the rock, but remained almost as flat as though it had been painted into the scenery. Afterward I asked a number of friends in the audience if they had seen what I had. They had not; nor had others of whom they made inquiries. I was beginning to think that the appearance of Wagner's face against the rock was a freak of mirage, resulting perhaps from the positions of some of the lights behind the scenes, when I mentioned the matter to one of the principal singers in the cast. He manifested surprise, not at what I had discovered, but at my having discovered it. He then told me that weeks before the production of "Parsifal," Wagner had chalked little crosses on the stage to indicate the exact spots where he wanted the singers to stand and had also drawn lines to show the direction in which they were to move from one point to another; and had himself drilled them in every movement. At the dress rehearsals and during the performance he had watched them, except during the first scene of the first act, from behind the scenes, in order to observe whether or not they closely followed his directions. Discovering that in the scene referred to he could not command a full view of the stage from any point at which he was entirely hidden from the audience, he had selected the place where I had noticed him, because there, when the stage was lighted, his complexion and the coloring of the scenery almost blended, and he considered himself safe from detection. I was much impressed at this incident. For it furnished a clue to the vast amount of labor which, unknown to the public, preceded the production of "Parsifal." If one detail in the performance had necessitated so much thought, drilling, and watchfulness, how much of these, beyond the most liberal estimate of the public, must have been developed during the long period of preparation. As I thought the matter over, the energy expended in the performance of the work dwindled into insignificance compared with that which must have been called into play while the work was preparing for production.

Some years later, amid entirely different surroundings—at the Metropolitan Opera-House, New York, during the cathedral scene in Meyerbeer's "Prophet"—I was reminded of my Baireuth experience. In the scene of "The Prophet" a brilliant pageant unfolded itself as smoothly as if it were regulated by a machine controlled in turn by the rhythm of the Coronation March; for each division of the procession came upon the stage with the first beat of the measure at which it made its appearance and kept step with the music. The stage-manager seemed to have calculated the exact interval of time which would be occupied by each division in crossing and going up the stage, for the soldiers who brought up the rear disappeared behind the scenes with the last chord of the march.

It then occurred to me that an audience sees but a small portion of a theatre. What goes on in the space above, beneath, behind, and on either side of the stage? Are not the unseen regions of a theatre more interesting perhaps than those that are seen? These questions arose in my mind during the performance of "The Prophet," as they had at Baireuth. In that instance I had been unable to follow up the subject. In the latter, however, I was more fortunate. For, through the courtesy of the managing director, I was enabled to penetrate the innermost recesses of an opera-house of the first rank, an establishment, a tour of discovery behind whose scenes reveals all the resources of the modern stage; inasmuch as one finds there not only everything pertaining to a theatre, but also the numerous and varied contrivances which have been devised for the production of the works of the modern German repertoire. This is especially true of the Metropolitan Opera-House, because every article used in the performances at that house is manufactured on the premises, and because in the special line of mechanical contrivances needed for the production of Wagner's works, now so prominently before the public, Yankee ingenuity has grafted many improvements on German designs, so that our opera-house, though young in years, has in stage craft a longer head than the old-established German opera-houses.

The regions in which the labor of preparing a musico-dramatic work for production goes on are a veritable bee-hive of activity. They embrace besides the rooms of the heads of the various departments—musical conductor, stage-manager, scenic artist, costumer, property-master, gas-engineer, and master carpenter—those in which their ideas are materialized. Connected, for instance, with the property department is a modelling-room, a casting-room, two rooms in which such properties as flowers, grass-mats, and birds are manufactured, two armories, and three or four apartments in which properties are stored—but this is taking the reader a little too far behind the footlights for the present. Before we begin our voyage of discovery it is well to box the theatrical compass.

The stage, properly speaking, is that portion of a theatre which can be seen from the auditorium, and the space on either side, behind the proscenium, utilized in shifting the "wings," as the side-scenes are called, when a scene is changing. The stage is width-wise divided into five parts. The side to the extreme left of the spectator is called the prompt-side. The prompter stands there in theatres in which there is no prompter's box. Half-way between the prompt-side and the point which marks half the width of the stage is the prompt-centre. Then there are the centre proper, and, corresponding with the prompt-centre and prompt-side, the opposite-prompt-centre and the opposite-prompt-side, or, as they are always called in theatrical parlance, the o-p-centre and o-p-side. The depth of the stage is divided into "entrances" according to the number of wings. Thus the "first-prompt-entrance" is between the proscenium and the first wing on the prompt-side. Corresponding with it on the opposite side is the "first o-p-entrance," etc. These divisions and their appellations hold good not only of width and depth, but also of height. For instance, the prompt-centre extends from the floor of the stage to the beams far above—a height sometimes of 160 feet—to which are attached the pulleys and huge leverage wheels for running the ropes that lower and raise the drop-scenes.

Everything above the proscenium arch is summed up in the term "flies," a word more frequently misused than any other theatrical term, and wrongly defined even in the principal dictionaries of the English language. The uninitiated almost invariably use this term in speaking of the strips of canvas painted to resemble sky, foliage, arches, or the ceilings of interiors suspended across the stage above the wings. These are the "borders," and form but a small portion of the flies, which include the border-lights (rows of gas-jets running across the flies and illuminating the borders), innumerable ropes, cleets, pulleys, the beams to which these last are attached, and the fly-galleries on either side, from the lowest of which the drop-scenes and borders are worked. These galleries vary in number according to the size of the house. In opera-houses of the first rank they are four in number, so that the flies are four stories high. Then, from the prompt-side across to the o-p-side, stretch, a story higher, the beams already referred to. These in the aggregate have two names, according to the position of the person speaking of them. Looking upward from the floor of the stage, he would call them the gridiron; standing on them, he would speak of them as the rigging-loft. The drops in large houses are about 56 feet high, and as they are raised, not rolled up, the space from the top of the borders, on a line with the first fly-gallery, to the gridiron is about 80 feet high, giving room for the drop and 24 feet of rope. There are five ropes to each drop—the prompt, prompt-centre, centre, o-p-centre, and o-p rope. These run from the gridiron down to the first fly-gallery, where they are fastened around cleets and from where they are worked.

While the floor of the stage runs from the footlights to the rear wall of the building, the entire depth is rarely utilized, because a section extending about eight feet forward from the rear wall is reserved for the paint-room. The floor of the paint-room is a platform called the paint-bridge, which extends across the stage and can be raised and lowered between the floor of the stage and the first fly-gallery. The canvas to be painted having been hung in position so that its top is level

ARGUMENT.

"FIDELIO"

ACT I.—The first scene represents the court-yard of a State prison in Spain. In the lowest part of the dungeon has been lying for two years Florestan, a victim of the hatred of Don Pizarro, governor of the prison, who, after locking up Florestan without just cause, had spread the report that he was dead. But his wife Leonora, in male attire, and under the name of Fidelio, succeeds in getting admitted to the fortress as assistant of the jailer Rocco. When the curtain rises, Rocco's daughter, Marcellina, is discovered ironing and conversing with Giacelimo, another assistant of Rocco, who insists on having her "love, or, at least, marry him," while her affections are bestowed on Fidelio, whom her father also wishes her to marry. Pizarro arrives with his officers and opens his dispatches. Among them he finds one warning him confidentially that the minister has been notified that prisoners are unjustly confined in Pizarro's dungeon, and that he intends to surprise him and investigate matters. Pizarro immediately makes up his mind that Florestan must die, and offers Rocco a large sum to assassinate him. But the jailer cannot overcome his repugnance to such a deed, so Pizarro tells him he will himself stab him, but bids Rocco go and dig the grave. Fidelio reappears on the scene, and begs Rocco to give the prisoners an airing in the yard, to which he consents; but her husband, she finds, is not among them. Pizarro returns in terrible anger at the release of the prisoners, sends them back, and bids Rocco go to his task with this gallery, the work of painting begins, the bridge being lowered as occasion requires. Frequently, however, the canvas is hung on pulleys from one of the gridiron beams and gradually lowered, the bridge remaining suspended between the prompt-side of the first fly-gallery and the o-p-side, thus forming a convenient crossing from one side of the house to the other for those at work in the upper stories, who would otherwise have to descend to the stage floor, cross it, and ascend several flights of stairs on the other side. Until within about a fortnight of the production of an opera or music-drama the work of preparation goes on in the buildings on either side of the stage and flies, and is not until that seemingly late period transferred to these latter.

ACT II.—In act second Florestan is seen in his subterranean abode, sitting on a stone and lamenting his fate. Rocco and Leonora appear with tools for digging, and remove a stone and the soil above a cistern. Florestan fails to recognize his wife, who gives him some wine. When Pizarro, at a signal by Rocco, descends and is about to stab the prisoner, Fidelio suddenly draws a pistol and bids him stand back. At this moment a bugle-call is heard outside. The minister has arrived just in time to punish Pizarro, and re-unites Florestan and Leonora.

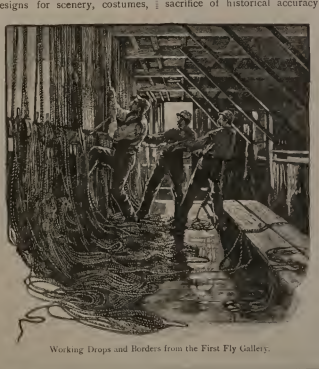
At the production of the work the audience, comfortably seated, watches the performance unfold itself so smoothly that it suggests no idea of preliminary labor. This is as it should be. For as an actor must cause the result of his art to seem nature itself, so the theatrical manager must cause the action and its scenic surroundings to appear the spontaneous product of the time in which the drama or opera plays. We are apt to credit only the actor with the genius of simulating nature. As a matter of fact, the principle upon which he proceeds governs every detail of a theatrical or—to remain by the subject in hand—an operatic production. What the actor strives for, the manager, stage-manager, scene-painter, property-master, gas-meter, master machinist, musical conductor, chorus, and principal singers are striving for. Each in his respective department is endeavouring to simulate nature. I emphasize simulate, because the simulation of nature as distinguished from the actual reproduction of nature is the peculiar province of stage art. It is a fact that a real tree upon the stage looks less like a real tree from the auditorium than a tree painted upon a piece of canvas; and that with a bit of canvas and a little paint the scene-painter can, at the expense of a few dollars, produce a Persian rug looking costlier and more like the real article than would an actual Persian rug costing a thousand dollars. What in real life would be exaggeration becomes on the stage perfect simulation of nature. The actor's natural bloom would be a ghostly pallor in the glare of the footlights, so that he is obliged to rouge his cheeks in order that their color may look natural. And as in this case the look of nature is produced by exaggeration, so it is with everything pertaining to stage art—voice, gesture, costume, scenery, "properties," light-effects. They must all, so to speak, be rouged. A stage production, to be successful, must be prepared with this principle always in view. It can easily be traced through the work going on behind the scenes of an opera-house.

When Napoleon III., before declaring war upon Prussia, asked one of his ministers if everything were in readiness for the army to move on Berlin, the latter replied: "To the last button on the last gaiter." Unless everything pertaining to an operatic performance is in readiness to the last papier-maché shield for the last "super," there will be an operatic Sedan. The operatic host must be placed on a war footing. Some idea of the labor this involves may be formed from the statement that at the Metropolitan Opera-House it took from August, 1887, until January, 1888, to mobilize this host for the conquest of Mexico under "Ferdinand Cortez," a period of about the same length as that usually consumed at large opera-houses in preparing a work for production.

On the Paint Bridge

On the 1st of August, 1887, the managing director handed the libretto to the members of his staff. They immediately set to work to exhaust the bibliography of the episode lying at the basis of the action as thoroughly as though they intended to write a history. For they knew the production would have to be as far as possible a materialization of a page from history. They found the Despatches of Cortez and Charnay's work on Mexico of especial value, the illustrations in the latter suggesting designs for scenery, costumes, weapons, and other properties. The scenic artist and costumer came almost at the very outset of their investigations upon stumbling blocks in the way of "putting on" their share in the production with historical accuracy. The buildings in which part of the opera plays were a mass of granite, and their faithful reproduction would have been inconsistent with the desired spectacular effect. The costumer, who was obliged to study both the Spanish and Mexican costumes of the period, discovered that the garbs of the Mexican women were not picturesque, while those of the Mexican priests were indecent. These matters were exhaustively discussed at a cabinet meeting in the managing director's office. It was decided, so far as the unbroken mass of granite and the costumes of the Mexican priests and women were concerned, to abandon historical accuracy, and, while retaining the architectural forms, to introduce some colors and to use the costumes of a somewhat later period. Here we observe that stage-art demanded a sacrifice of historical accuracy, but that the semblance of the latter was maintained as far as possible. It became necessary to "theatreize" or idealize history. This is one of the most delicate problems presented to a conscientious theatrical manager. The solution is always in the line of the principle governing all theatrical productions—simulation. I am reminded here of a passage in Ruskin's "Modern Painters" to the effect that the true artist sees nature not as it really is, but idealized through his artist-imagination, and puts upon canvas only what his artist-soul allows his memory to retain. Similarly, those concerned in placing a work like "Ferdinand Cortez" upon the stage cannot be mere photographers of history.



Working Drops and Borders from the First Fly Gallery.

Meanwhile the property-master had made out a list of the articles to be manufactured in his department. He had not been hampered by the problem of historical accuracy. He found drawings of Mexican antiquities from which he made sketches of the Mexican implements of war and peace to be used in the opera, and from a genuine Mexican relic of that period, seen by chance in the show window of a store, he obtained his scheme for the principal property in the work, the image of the god Talepulka. He found he could have all these historically correct, except that he did not think it necessary to go to the length of decorating the idol with a paste made from a mixture of grain with human blood. A problem arose, however, when he considered the construction of the idol. He ascertained from the libretto that the idol and the back wall of the temple are shattered by an explosion, and that, just before the catastrophe, flames flash from the idol's eyes and mouth. He consulted with the gas-engineer, who had already considered the matter, and concluded that it would be most practicable to produce the flames by means of gas supplied through a hose from the wings.

The property-master then made the following note in his plot book: "Flames leap up high from the heathen image—the gas-hose must be detached and drawn into the wings immediately afterward so as not to be visible when the image has fallen apart." The necessity of having the gas-hose detached determined the method of shattering the idol. It is a theatrical principle that a mechanical property should be so constructed that it can be worked by the smallest possible number of men. This principle was kept in view when the method of shattering Talepulka was determined upon. The god was divided from top to bottom into two irregular pieces. These were held together by a line, invisible from the audience, which was tied around the image near the pedestal. Another line, leading into the wings, was attached to the side of the top of one of the pieces. At the first report of the explosion a man concealed behind the pedestal, whose duty it also is to detach the gas-hose, cuts the line fastened around the idol, and the pieces slightly separate, so that the image seems to have cracked in two jagged pieces. At the next report a man in the wings pulls at the other line and the pieces fall apart.

MUSIC AMONG THE GREEKS.

"Music is pursued, not only as an alleviation of past toil * * * it has a power "of forming character." (Aristotle).

"Song is to mortals of all things the sweetest." (Musæus).

The Greeks in the flower of their culture gave to music a higher rank both in education and amusement than it has ever held since. The place, power, and value of music are most interestingly discoursed upon by Aristotle in his Politics. He argues in this connection that there is a certain kind of education which is to be valued because it is noble and liberal (not useful), and will enable us to take delight in pleasures of an elevated kind; under this head he places music saying: All men "agree that music is one of the "pleasantest things, whether with or without song." He goes further than this, claiming that music is not alone a recreation; he states distinctly: "It has power to form character," explaining his assertion thus: "Music conduces to virtue on the "ground that it can form our minds "and habituate us to true pleasures, "as our bodies are made by gymnastics to be of a certain character."

Aristotle's own words, as yet scarcely known in the world of music, are immortal, and should be familiar to every musician. Hear what he says of this noble art:

"It is clear then that there are "branches of learning and education "which we must study with a view "to the enjoyment of leisure, and "these are to be valued for their own "sake; whereas those kinds of knowledge which are useful in business "are to be deemed necessary, and "exist for the sake of other things. "Therefore our fathers admitted "music into education, not on the "ground either of its necessity or "utility, for it is not necessary in the "same manner as reading and writing, which are useful in money-"making, and in the management of "a household; nor again like gym-"nastics which give health and "strength. There remains then the "use of music for intellectual enjoyment in leisure, which appears to "have been the reason of its introduction, this being one of the ways "in which it is thought that a free-"man should pass his leisure."

"With good reason music is introduced into social gatherings, because it makes the hearts of men "glad; so that on this ground alone "we may assume that the young "ought to be trained in it. For in-"nocent pleasures are not only in "harmony with the perfect end of life, "but they also provide relaxation.

"And whereas men rarely attain "the end, but often rest by the way "and amuse themselves, . . it may "be well for them at times to find a "refreshment in music. . . Since "then music is a pleasure, and vir-"tue consists in rejoicing and loving, "and hating aright, there is clearly "nothing which we are so much con-"cerned to acquire and cultivate as "the power of forming right judg-"ments, and of taking delight in good "dispositions and noble actions. "Rhythm and melody supply imita-"tions of anger and gentleness, also "of courage and temperance, and of "virtues and vices in general, which "hardly fall short of the actual affec-"tions, as we know from our own "experiences, for in listening to such "strains our souls undergo a change. "The habit of feeling pleasure or "pain at mere representations is not "far removed from the same feeling "about realities."

Aristotle goes on to enumerate the different kinds of music, classifying them according to the moral effect. Some kinds of music, he says, "make men sad and grave . . "others enfeeble the mind, others, "again, produce a moderate and set-"tled temper, which appears to be "the peculiar effect of the Dorian; "the Phrygian inspires enthusiasm. "The same principles apply to "rhythms: some have a character of "rest, others of motion, and of these "latter again, some have a more "vulgar, others a nobler movement. "Enough has therefore been said to "show that music has a power of "forming the character, and should "therefore be introduced into the "education of the young."

As to musical education he says farther: "They who are to be "judges must also be performers. "The right measure will be attained "if students of music stop short of "the arts which are practised in pro-"fessional contests, and do not seek "to acquire those fantastic marvels "of execution which are now the "fashion. Let the young pursue "their studies until they are able to "feel delight in noble melodies and "rhythms, and not merely in that "common part of music in which "every slave or child, or even some "animals, find pleasure."

It is curious to note the influence ascribed to certain musical instruments. The flute, for instance, was branded as having a bad moral effect; Aristotle says "it is too exciting!" The Lydian harp came in the same category.

Purification was one of the offices of music. Aristotle mentions the use of certain "mystic melodies, which "bring healing and purification to the soul."

While the effect of the stage upon the public has nowhere been more fully recognized than in Greece (the cradle of the music-drama), we find in Aristotle the following powerful statement of the reverse action—the influence of the audience on the character of the performance and performers. "The vulgarity of the "spectator tends to lower the char-"acter of the music and therefore of "the performers; they look to him "—he makes them what they are, "and fashions even their bodies by "the movements which he expects "them to exhibit."

And all this is more than two thousand years old! Here we find expressed by a master of the art, thoughts which we imagined only those of the last quarter century had rightly grasped. And what has been said in our own day and generation of this mighty civilizer and educator —Music. George Eliot writes, "I "agree with you as to the inherent "superiority 'of music' . . painting "and sculpture are 'but an idealizing "of our existence.' Music 'arches "over this existence with another and "'diviner.'"

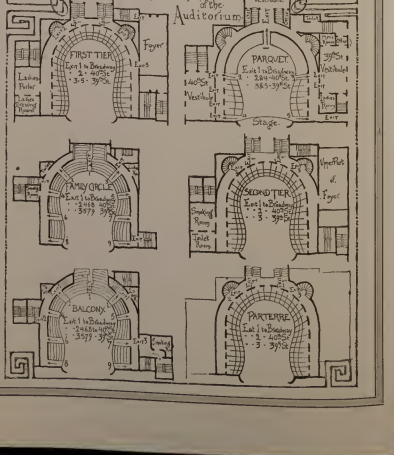
WAGNER ON MOZART.

It may be well to correct the absurd notion which Wagner's enemies have assiduously spread that he looked upon Mozart with the contempt of a superior genius. On the contrary, he says, in his "Oper und Drama":—"I point out to you again the glorious composer, in whom music was all that she can be in man, when she, in the fullness of her nature, is music wholly, and nothing but music. Look upon Mozart! Was he the less a musician because he was only thoroughly a musician, and was not and did not wish to be anything else but a musician? Look at "Don Giovanni." Where has music assumed such infinitely pure individuality, and where has she known so surely and directly to delineate character in richest and overflowing fullness as here?"

WEBER ANECDOTES.

One day Weber received an invitation from the Princess Maria Paulowna, to come to Weimar, and teach her some of his works, including the sonata in C which he had dedicated to her. On this subject he subsequently wrote to a friend: "The princess often says that she does not believe she will ever play the sonata properly as long as she lives. If she were not a princess, I should be at liberty to tell her that I fully agree with her."

At his publisher's office in Offenbach Weber for the first time saw an autograph of Mozart's, and his behavior on this occasion touchingly expressed his unbounded veneration for Mozart's genius. He laid it carefully on the table, and on bended knees pressed his forehead and lips to it, gazed at it with tears in his eyes, and then handed it back with the words, "Happy the paper on which his hand has rested."



From Scribner's Magazine, October 1888.

BEHIND THE SCENES OF AN OPERA-HOUSE.

BY GUSTAV KOBBE.

Soon after the curtain had risen on the first performance of Wagner's "Parsifal," at Baireuth, in July, 1882, my attention was suddenly attracted by a peculiar excrescence on one of the rocks in the left foreground of the stage. Gradually, as I looked, the excrescence assumed the shape of a human head, and some minutes afterward I was able to distinguish the face of Wagner himself outlined against the piece of rock scenery. At first I supposed he had ventured out too far from behind the scenes in order to observe the effect of his last music-drama upon the audience. But this supposition was dispelled by the circumstance that he rarely looked toward the auditorium. He seemed rather to be watching the singers on the stage. The face remained in view until the panoramic change of scene from the forest to the Castle of the Grail. It struck me as a curious circumstance that although I frequently looked at the face during the progress of the scene, it did not grow into any bolder relief against the rock, but remained almost as flat as though it had been painted into the scenery. Afterward I asked a number of friends in the audience if they had seen what I had. They had not; nor had others of whom they made inquiries. I was beginning to think that the appearance of Wagner's face against the rock was a freak of mirage, resulting perhaps from the positions of some of the lights behind the scenes, when I mentioned the matter to one of the principal singers in the cast. He manifested surprise, not at what I had discovered, but at my having discovered it. He then told me that weeks before the production of "Parsifal," Wagner had chalked little crosses on the stage to indicate the exact spots where he wished the singers to stand and had also drawn lines to show the direction in which they were to move from one point to another, and had himself outlined them in every movement. At the dress rehearsals and during the performance he had watched them, except during the first scene of the first act, from behind the scenes, in order to observe whether or not they closely followed his directions. Discovering that in the scene referred to he could not command a full view of the stage from any point at which he was entirely hidden from the audience, he had selected the place where I had noticed him, because there, when the stage was lighted, his complexion and the coloring of the scenery almost blended, and he considered himself safe from detection. I was much impressed at this incident. For it furnished a clue to the vast amount of labor which, unknown to the public, preceded the production of "Parsifal." If one detail in the performance had necessitated so much thought, drilling, and watchfulness, how much of these, beyond the most liberal estimate of the public, must have been developed during the long period of preparation. As I thought the matter over, the energy expended in the performance of the work dwindled into insignificance compared with that which must have been called into play while the work was preparing for production.

Some years later, amid entirely different surroundings—at the Metropolitan Opera-House, New York, during the cathedral scene in Meyerbeer's "Prophet"—I was reminded of my Baireuth experience. In the scene of "The Prophet" a brilliant pageant unfolded itself as smoothly as if it were regulated by a machine controlled in turn by the rhythm of the Coronation March; for each division of the procession came upon the stage with the first beat of the measure at which it made its appearance and kept step with the music. The stage-manager seemed to have calculated the exact interval of time which would be occupied by each division in crossing and going up the stage, for the soldiers who brought up the rear disappeared behind the scenes with the last chord of the march.

It then occurred to me that an audience sees but a small portion of a theatre. What goes on in the space above, beneath, behind, and on either side of the stage? Are not the unseen regions of a theatre more interesting perhaps than those that are seen? These questions arose in my mind during the performance of "The Prophet," as they had at Baireuth. In that instance I had been unable to follow up the subject. In the latter, however, I was more fortunate. For, through the courtesy of the managing director, I was enabled to penetrate the innermost recesses of an opera-house of the first rank, an establishment, a tour of discovery behind whose scenes reveals all the resources of the modern stage; inasmuch as one finds there not only everything pertaining to a theatre, but also the numerous and varied contrivances which have been devised for the production of the works of the modern German repertoire. This is especially true of the Metropolitan Opera-House, because every article used in the performances at that house is manufactured on the premises, and because in the special line of mechanical contrivances needed for the production of Wagner's works, now so prominently before the public, Yankee ingenuity has grafted many improvements on German designs, so that our opera-house, though young in years, has in stage-craft a longer lead than the old-established German opera-houses.

The regions in which the labor of preparing a musico-dramatic work for production goes on are a veritable bee-hive of activity. They embrace besides the rooms of the heads of the various departments—musical conductor, stage-manager, scenic artist, costumer, property-master, gas-engineer, and master carpenter—those in which their ideas are materialized. Connected, for instance, with the property department is a modelling-room, a casting-room, two rooms in which such properties as flowers, grass-mats, and birds are manufactured, two armories, and three or four apartments in which properties are stored—but this is taking the reader a little too far behind the footlights for the present. Before we begin our voyage of discovery it is well to box the theatrical compass.

The stage, properly speaking, is that portion of a theatre which can be seen from the auditorium, and the space on either side, behind the proscenium, utilized in shifting the "wings," as the side-scenes are called, when a scene is changing. The stage is width-wise divided into five parts. The side to the extreme left of the spectator is called the prompt-side. The prompter stands there in theatres in which there is no prompter's box. Half-way between the prompt-side and the point which marks half the width of the stage is the prompt-centre. Then there are the centre proper, and, corresponding with the prompt-centre and prompt-side, the opposite-prompt-centre and the opposite-prompt-side, or, as they are always called in theatrical parlance, the o-p-centre and o-p-side. The depth of the stage is divided into "entrances" according to the number of wings. Thus the "first prompt-entrance" is between the proscenium and the first wing on the prompt-side. Corresponding with it on the opposite side is the "first o-p-entrance." All these divisions and their appellations hold good not only of width and depth, but also of height. For instance, the prompt-centre extends from the floor of the stage to the beams far above—a height sometimes of 160 feet—to which are attached the pulleys and huge leverage wheels for running the ropes that lower and raise the drop-scenes.

Everything above the proscenium arch is summed up in the term "flies," a word more frequently misused than any other theatrical term, and wrongly defined even in the principal dictionaries of the English language. The uninitiated almost invariably use this term in speaking of the strips of canvas painted to resemble sky, foliage, arches, or the ceilings of interiors suspended across the stage above the wings. These are the "borders," and form but a small portion of the flies, which include the border-lights (rows of gasjets running across the flies and illuminating the borders), innumerable ropes, cleets, pulleys, the beams to which these last are attached, and the fly-galleries on either side, from the lowest of which the drop-scenes and borders are worked. These galleries vary in number according to the size of the house. In opera-houses of the first rank they are four in number, so that the flies are four stories high. Then, from the prompt-side across to the o-p-side, stretch, a story higher, the beams already referred to. These in the aggregate have many names, according to the position of the person speaking of them. Looking upward from the floor of the stage, he would call them the gridiron; standing on them, he would speak of them as the rigging-loft. The drops in large houses are about 56 feet high, and as they are raised, not rolled up, the space from the top of the borders, on a line with the first fly-gallery, to the gridiron is about 80 feet high, giving room for the drop and 24 feet of rope. There are five ropes to each drop—the prompt, prompt-centre, centre, o-p-centre, and o-p rope. These run from the gridiron down to the first fly-gallery, where they are fastened around cleets and from where they are worked.

While the floor of the stage runs from the footlights to the rear wall of the building, the entire depth is rarely utilized, because a section extending about eight feet forward from the rear wall is reserved for the paint-room. The floor of the paint-room is a platform called the paint-bridge, which extends across the stage and can be raised and lowered between the floor of the stage and the first fly-gallery. The canvas to be painted having been hung in position so that its top is level

ARGUMENT.

The liberation of the Swiss Cantons from the Austrian yoke, through the patriotism of William Tell, forms the basis of the Opera. Gesler, the stern and cruel Governor of the Provinces, has a sister, named Matilda, who is beloved by Arnold, the son of the patriarch of the country, Melcthal. An agent of Gesler having offered an insult to the daughter of Leuthold, a herdsman, is killed by her father, who, compelled to escape by crossing the lake, is ferried over by William Tell, a bold mountaineer, who has long cherished the design of freeing his countrymen from the tyranny of the Austrians. The disaffection of the people spreading, Melcthal, who is suspected of inciting them to insubordination, is executed, by the order of Gesler; and this act makes Arnold at once renounce his love for Matilda and join the band of patriots under William Tell. At a festival, Gesler orders the people to bow before his hat, which is elevated on a pole. Tell, refusing to do this, is arrested with his son Jemmy; but the tyrant agrees to spare the life of his son on condition that Tell, who is well known as a skilled archer, can shoot an apple placed on the boy's head. Although the distance is considerable, Tell accomplishes the feat; but dropping an arrow, confesses that he intended it for Gesler, had he failed The Governor, on hearing this, orders Tell to be thrown into a dungeon, from which, however, he escapes, and again stirring up his countrymen to revolt, Gesler is killed by an arrow from Tell. The Opera concludes with the union of Matilda and Arnold.

with this gallery, the work of painting begins, the bridge being lowered as occasion requires. Frequently, however, the canvas is hung on pulleys from one of the gridiron beams and gradually lowered, the bridge remaining suspended between the prompt-side of the first fly-gallery and the o-p-side, thus forming a convenient crossing from one side of the house to the other for those at work in the upper stories, who would otherwise have to descend to the stage floor, cross it, and ascend several flights of stairs on the other side. Until within about a fortnight of the production of an opera or musicdrama the work of preparation goes on in the buildings on either side of the stage and flies, and is not until that seemingly late period transferred to these latter.

At the production of the work the audience, comfortably seated, watches the performance unfold itself so smoothly that it suggests no idea of preliminary labor. This is as it should be. For as an actor must cause the result of his art to seem nature itself, so the theatrical manager must cause the action and its scenic surroundings to appear the spontaneous product of the time in which the drama or opera plays. We are apt to credit only the actor with the genius of simulating nature. As a matter of fact, the principle upon which he proceeds governs every detail of a theatrical or—to remain by the subject in hand—an operatic production. What the actor strives for, the manager, stage-manager, scene-painter, property-master, gas-engineer, master machinist, musical conductor, chorus, and principal singers are striving for. Each in his respective department is endeavouring to simulate nature. I emphasize simulate, because the simulation of nature as distinguished from the actual reproduction of nature is the peculiar province of stage art. It is a fact that a real tree upon the stage looks less like a real tree from the auditorium than a tree painted upon a piece of canvas; and that with a bit of canvas and a little paint the scene-painter can, at the expense of a few dollars, produce a Persian rug looking costlier and more like the real article than would an actual Persian rug costing a thousand dollars. What in real life would be exaggeration becomes on the stage perfect simulation of nature. The actor's natural bloom would be a ghostly pallor in the glare of the footlights, so that he is obliged to rouge his cheeks in order that their color may look natural. And as in this case the look of nature is produced by exaggeration, so it is with everything pertaining to stage art—voice, gesture, costume, scenery, "properties," light-effects. They must all, so to speak, be rouged. A stage production, to be successful, must be prepared with this principle always in view. It can easily be traced through the work going on behind the scenes of an opera-house.

When Napoleon III., before declaring war upon Prussia, asked one of his ministers if everything were in readiness for the army to move on Berlin, the latter replied: "To the last button on the last gaiter." Unless everything pertaining to an operatic performance is in readiness to the last papier-maché shield for the last "super," there will be an operatic Sedan. The operatic host must be placed on a war footing. Some idea of the labor this involves may be formed from the statement that at the Metropolitan Opera-House it took from August, 1887, until January, 1888, to mobilize this host for the conquest of Mexico under "Ferdinand Cortez," a period of about the same length as that usually consumed at large opera-houses in preparing a work for production.

On the 1st of August, 1887, the managing director handed the libretto to the members of his staff. They immediately set to work to exhaust the bibliography of the episode lying at the basis of the action as thoroughly as though they intended to write a history. For they knew the production would have to be as far as possible a materialization of a page from history. They found the Despatches of Cortez and Charnay's work on Mexico of especial value, the illustrations in the latter suggesting designs for scenery, costumes, weapons, and other properties. The scenic artist and costumer came almost at the very outset of their investigations upon, stumbling blocks in the way of "putting on" their share in the production with historical accuracy. The buildings in which part of the opera plays were a mass of granite, and their faithful reproduction would have been inconsistent with the desired spectacular effect. The costumer, who was obliged to study both the Spanish and Mexican costumes of the period, discovered that the garbs of the Mexican women were not picturesque, while those of the Mexican priests were indecent. These matters were exhaustively discussed at a cabinet meeting in the managing director's office. It was decided, so far as the unbroken mass of granite and the costumes of the Mexican priests and women were concerned, to abandon historical accuracy, and, while retaining the architectural forms, to introduce some colors and to use the costumes of a somewhat later period. Here we observe that stage art demanded a sacrifice of historical accuracy, but that the semblance of the latter was maintained as far as possible. It became necessary to "theatreize" or idealize history. This is one of the most delicate problems presented to a conscientious theatrical manager. The solution is always in the line of the principle governing all theatrical productions — simulation. I am reminded here of a passage in Ruskin's "Modern Painters" to the effect that the true artist sees nature not as it really is, but idealized through his artist-imagination, and puts upon canvas only what his artist-soul allows his memory to retain. Similarly, those concerned in placing a work like "Ferdinand Cortez" upon the stage cannot be mere photographers of history.

On the Paint Bridge

Meanwhile the property-master had made out a list of the articles to be manufactured in his department. He had not been hampered by the problem of historical accuracy. He found drawings of Mexican antiquities from which he made sketches of the Mexican implements of war and peace to be used in the opera, and from a genuine Mexican relic of that period, seen by chance in the show window of a store, he obtained his scheme for the principal property in the work, the image of the god Talepulka. He found he could have all these historically correct, except that he did not think it necessary to go to the length of decorating the idol with a paste made from a mixture of grain with human blood. A problem arose, however, when he considered the construction of the idol. He ascertained from the libretto that the idol and the back wall of the temple are shattered by an explosion, and that, just before the catastrophe, flames flash from the idol's eyes and mouth. He consulted with the gas-engineer, who had already considered the matter, and concluded that it would be most practical to produce the flames by means of gas supplied through a hose from the wings.

The property-master then made the following note in his pilot book: "Flames leap up high from the heathen image—the gas-hose must he detached and drawn into the wings immediately afterward so as not to be visible when the image has fallen apart." The necessity of having the gas-hose detached determined the method of shattering the idol. It is a theatrical principle that a mechanical property should be so constructed that it can be worked by the smallest possible number of men. This principle was kept in view when the method of shattering Talepulka was determined upon. The god was divided from top to bottom into two irregular pieces. These were held together by a line, iovisible from the audience, which was tied around the image near the pedestal. Another line, leading into the wings, was attached to the side of the top of one of the pieces. At the first report of the explosion a man concealed behind the pedestal, whose duty it also is to detach the gas-hose, cuts the line fastened around the idol, and the pieces slightly separate, so that the image seems to have cracked in two jagged pieces. At the next report a man in the wings pulls at the other line and the pieces fall apart.

MUSIC AMONG THE GREEKS.

"Music is pursued, not only as an allevia-
"tion of past toil * * * it has a power
"of forming character." (Aristotle).

"Song is to mortals of all things the sweetest." (Musaeus).

The Greeks in the flower of their culture gave to music a higher rank both in education and amusement than it has ever held since. The place, power, and value of music are most interestingly discoursed upon by Aristotle in his Politics. He argues in this connection that there is a certain kind of education which is to be valued because it is noble and liberal (not useful), and will enable us to take delight in pleasures of an elevated kind; under this head he places music saying: All men "agree that music is one of the "pleasantest things, whether with or without song." He goes further than this, claiming that music is not alone a recreation; he states distinctly: "It has power to form character," explaining his assertion thus: "Music conduces to virtue on the "ground that it can form our minds "and habituate us to true pleasures, "as our bodies are made by gymnas-"tics to be of a certain character."

Aristotle's own words, as yet scarcely known in the world of music, are immortal, and should be familiar to every musician. Hear what he says of this noble art:

"It is clear then that there are "branches of learning and education "which we must study with a view "to the enjoyment of leisure, and "these are to be valued for their own "sake; whereas those kinds of knowl-"edge which are useful in business "are to be deemed necessary, and "exist for the sake of other things. "Therefore our fathers admitted "music into education, not on the "ground either of its necessity or "utility, for it is not necessary in the "same manner as reading and writ-"ing, which are useful in money-"making, and in the management of "a household; nor again like gym-"nastics which give health and "strength. There remains then the "use of music for intellectual en-"joyment in leisure, which appears to "have been the reason of its intro-"duction, this being one of the ways "in which it is thought that a free-"man should pass his leisure."

"With good reason music is intro-"duced into social gatherings, be-"cause it makes the hearts of men "glad; so that on this ground alone "we may assume that the young "ought to be trained in it. For in-"nocent pleasures are not only in "harmony with the perfect end of life, "but they also provide relaxation.

"And whereas men rarely attain "the end, but often rest by the way "and amuse themselves, . . it may "be well for them at times to find a "refreshment in music. . . Since "then music is a pleasure, and vir-"tue consists in rejoicing and loving, "and hating aright, there is clearly "nothing which we are so much con-"cerned to acquire and cultivate as "the power of forming right judg-"ments, and of taking delight in good "dispositions and noble actions. "Rhythm and melody supply imita-"tions of anger and gentleness, also "of courage and temperance, and of "virtues and vices in general, which "hardly fall short of the actual affec-"tions, as we know from our own "experiences, for in listening to such "strains our souls undergo a change. "The habit of feeling pleasure or "pain at mere representations is not "far removed from the same feeling "about realities."

Aristotle goes on to enumerate the different kinds of music, classifying them according to the moral effect. Some kinds of music, he says, "make men sad and grave . . "others enfeeble the mind, others, "again, produce a moderate and set-"tled temper, which appears to be "the peculiar effect of the Dorian; "the Phrygian inspires enthusiasm. "The same principles apply to "rhythms: some have a character of "rest, others of motion, and of these "latter again, some have a more "vulgar, others a nobler movement. "Enough has therefore been said to "show that music has a power of "forming the character, and should "therefore be introduced into the "education of the young."

As to musical education he says farther: "They who are to be "judges must also be performers. "The right measure will be attained "if students of music stop short of "the arts which are practised in pro-"fessional contests, and do not seek "to acquire those fantastic marvels "of execution which are now the "fashion. Let the young pursue "their studies until they are able to "feel delight in noble melodies and "rhythms, and not merely in that "common part of music in which "every slave or child, or even some "animals, find pleasure."

It is curious to note the influence ascribed to certain musical instruments. The flute, for instance, was branded as having a bad moral effect; Aristotle says "it is too exciting!" The Lydian harp came in the same category.

Purification was one of the offices of music. Aristotle mentions the use of certain "mystic melodies, which "bring healing and purification to the soul."

While the effect of the stage upon the public has nowhere been more fully recognized than in Greece (the cradle of the music-drama), we find in Aristotle the following powerful statement of the reverse action—the influence of the audience on the character of the performance and performers. "The vulgarity of the "spectator tends to lower the char-"acter of the music and therefore of "the performers; they look to him "—he makes them what they are, "and fashions even their bodies by "the movements which he expects "them to exhibit."

And all this is more than two thousand years old! Here we find expressed by a master of the art, thoughts which we imagined only those of the last quarter century had rightly grasped. And what has been said in our own day and generation of this mighty civilizer and educator—Music. George Eliot writes, "I "agree with you as to the inherent "superiority 'of music' . . painting "and sculpture are 'but an idealizing "of our existence.' Music 'arches "over this existence with another and "'diviner.'"

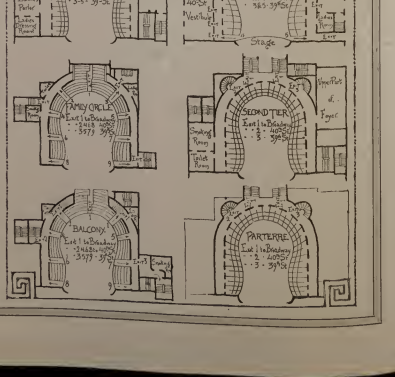
WAGNER ON MOZART.

It may be well to correct the absurd notion which Wagner's enemies have assiduously spread that he looked upon Mozart with the contempt of a superior genius. On the contrary, he says, in his "Oper und Drama":—"I point out to you again the glorious composer, in whom music was all that she can be in man, when she, in the fullness of her nature, is music wholly, and nothing but music. Look upon Mozart! Was he the less a musician because he was only thoroughly a musician, and was not and did not wish to be anything else but a musician? Look at "Don Giovanni." Where has music assumed such infinitely pure individuality, and where has she known so surely and directly to delineate character in richest and overflowing fullness as here?"

WEBER ANECDOTES.

One day Weber received an invitation from the Princess Maria Paulowna, to come to Weimar, and teach her some of his works, including the sonata in C which he had dedicated to her. On this subject he subsequently wrote to a friend: "The princess often says that she does not believe she will ever play the sonata properly as long as she lives. If she were not a princess, I should be at liberty to tell her that I fully agree with her."

At his publisher's office in Offenbach Weber for the first time saw an autograph of Mozart's, and his behavior on this occasion touchingly expressed his unbounded veneration for Mozart's genius. He laid it carefully on the table, and on bended knees pressed his forehead and lips to it, gazed at it with tears in his eyes, and then handed it back with the words, "Happy the paper on which his hand has rested."



From Scribner's Magazine, October 1888.

BEHIND THE SCENES OF AN OPERA-HOUSE.

BY GUSTAV KOBBE.

SOON after the curtain had risen on the first performance of Wagner's "Parsifal," at Baireuth, in July, 1882, my attention was suddenly attracted by a peculiar excrescence on one of the rocks in the left foreground of the stage. Gradually, as I looked, the excrescence assumed the shape of a human head, and some minutes afterward I was able to distinguish the face of Wagner himself outlined against the piece of rock scenery. At first I supposed he had ventured out too far from behind the scenes in order to observe the effect of his last music-drama upon the audience. But this supposition was dispelled by the circumstance that he rarely looked toward the auditorium. He seemed rather to be watching the singers on the stage. The face remained in view until the panoramic change of scene from the forest to the Castle of the Grail. It struck me as a curious circumstance that although I frequently looked at the face during the progress of the scene, it did not grow into any bolder relief against the rock, but remained almost as flat as though it had been painted into the scenery. Afterward I asked a number of friends in the audience if they had seen what I had. They had not; nor had others of whom they made inquiries. I was beginning to think that the appearance of Wagner's face against the rock was a freak of mirage, resulting perhaps from the positions of some of the lights behind the scenes, when I mentioned the matter to one of the principal singers in the cast. He manifested surprise, not at what I had discovered, but at my having discovered it. He then told me that weeks before the production of "Parsifal," Wagner had chalked little crosses on the stage to indicate the exact spots where he wanted the singers to stand and had also drawn lines to show the direction in which they were to move from one point to another; and had himself drilled them in every movement. At the dress rehearsals and during the performance he had watched them, except during the first scene of the first act, from behind the scenes, in order to observe whether or not they closely followed his directions. Discovering that in the scene referred to he could not command a full view of the stage from any point at which he was entirely hidden from the audience, he had selected the place where I had noticed him, because there, when the stage was lighted, his complexion and the coloring of the scenery almost blended, and he considered himself safe from detection. I was much impressed at this incident. For it furnished a clue to the vast amount of labor which, unknown to the public, preceded the production of "Parsifal." If one detail in the performance had necessitated so much thought, drilling, and watchfulness, how much of these, beyond the most liberal estimate of the public, must have been developed during the long period of preparation. As I thought the matter over, the energy expended in the performance of the work dwindled into insignificance compared with that which must have been called into play while the work was preparing for production.

Some years later, amid entirely different surroundings—at the Metropolitan Opera-House, New York, during the cathedral scene in Meyerbeer's "Prophet"—I was reminded of my Baireuth experience. In the scene of "The Prophet" a brilliant pageant unfolded itself as smoothly as if it were regulated by a machine controlled in turn by the rhythm of the Coronation March; for each division of the procession came upon the stage with the first beat of the measure at which it made its appearance and kept step with the music. The stage-manager seemed to have calculated the exact interval of time which would be occupied by each division in crossing and going up the stage, for the soldiers who brought up the rear disappeared behind the scenes with the last chord of the march.

It then occurred to me that an audience sees but a small portion of a theatre. What goes on in the space above, beneath, behind, and on either side of the stage? Are not the unseen regions of a theatre more interesting perhaps than those that are seen? These questions arose in my mind during the performance of "The Prophet," as they had at Baireuth. In that instance I had been unable to follow up the subject. In the latter, however, I was more fortunate. For, through the courtesy of the managing director, I was enabled to penetrate the innermost recesses of an opera-house of the first rank, an establishment, a tour of discovery behind whose scenes reveals all the resources of the modern stage; inasmuch as one finds there not only everything pertaining to a theatre, but also the numerous and varied contrivances which have been devised for the production of the works of the modern German repertoire. This is especially true of the Metropolitan Opera-House, because every article used in the performances at that house is manufactured on the premises, and because in the special line of mechanical contrivances needed for the production of Wagner's works, now so prominently before the public, Yankee ingenuity has grafted many improvements on German designs, so that our opera-house, though young in years, has in stage craft a longer head than the old-established German opera-houses.

The regions in which the labor of preparing a musico-dramatic work for production goes on are a veritable bee-hive of activity. They embrace besides the rooms of the heads of the various departments—musical conductor, stage-manager, scenic artist, costumer, property-master, gas-engineer, and master carpenter—those in which their ideas are materialized. Connected, for instance, with the property department is a modelling-room, a casting-room, two rooms in which such properties as flowers, grass-mats, and birds are manufactured, two armories, and three or four apartments in which properties are stored—but this is taking the reader a little too far behind the footlights for the present. Before we begin our voyage of discovery it is well to box the theatrical compass.

The stage, properly speaking, is that portion of a theatre which can be seen from the auditorium, and the space on either side, behind the proscenium, utilized in shifting the "wings," as the side-scenes are called, when a scene is changing. The stage is width-wise divided into five parts. The side to the extreme left of the spectator is called the prompt-side. The prompter stands there in theatres in which there is no prompter's box. Half-way between the prompt-side and the point which marks half the width of the stage is the prompt-centre. Then there are the centre proper, and, corresponding with the prompt-centre and prompt-side, the opposite-prompt-centre and the opposite-prompt-side, or, as they are always called in theatrical parlance, the o-p-centre and o-p-side. The depth of the stage is divided into "entrances" according to the number of wings. Thus the "first-prompt-entrance" is between the proscenium and the first wing on the prompt-side. Corresponding with it on the opposite side is the "first o-p-entrance." All these divisions and their appellations hold good not only of width and depth, but also of height. For instance, the prompt-centre extends from the floor of the stage to the beams far above—a height sometimes of 160 feet—to which are attached the pulleys and huge leverage wheels for running the ropes that lower and raise the drop-scenes.

Everything above the proscenium arch is summed up in the term "flies," a word more frequently misused than any other theatrical term, and wrongly defined even in the principal dictionaries of the English language. The uninitiated almost invariably use this term in speaking of the strips of canvas painted to resemble sky, foliage, arches, or the ceilings of interiors suspended across the stage above the wings. These are the "borders," and form but a small portion of the flies, which include the border-lights (rows of gas-jets running across the flies and illuminating the borders), innumerable ropes, cleets, pulleys, the beams to which these last are attached, and the fly-galleries on either side, from the lowest of which the drop-scenes and borders are worked. These galleries vary in number according to the size of the house. In opera-houses of the first rank they are four in number, so that the flies are four stories high. Then, from the prompt-side across to the o-p-side, stretch, a story higher, the beams already referred to. These in the aggregate have two names, according to the position of the person speaking of them. Looking upward from the floor of the stage, he would call them the gridiron; standing on them, he would speak of them as the rigging-loft. The drops in large houses are about 56 feet high, and as they are raised, not rolled up, the space from the top of the borders, on a line with the first fly-gallery, to the gridiron is about 80 feet high, giving room for the drop and 24 feet of rope. There are five ropes to each drop—the prompt, prompt-centre, centre, o-p-centre, and o-p rope. These run from the gridiron down to the first fly-gallery, where they are fastened around cleets and from where they are worked.

While the floor of the stage runs from the footlights to the rear wall of the building, the entire depth is rarely utilized, because a section extending about eight feet forward from the rear wall is reserved for the paint-room. The floor of the paint-room is a platform called the paint-bridge, which extends across the stage and can be raised and lowered between the floor of the stage and the first fly-gallery. The canvas to be painted having been hung in position so that its top is level

ARGUMENT.

I. The scene opens at Tourain—a room in the castle of Count de Nevers. A number of noblemen and gentlemen are present, feasting; amongst others Raoul de Nangis, the leader of the Huguenots. In the midst of the revelry Nevers is called out to see a veiled lady, in whom Raoul recognizes Valentina, whom he met casually before, but whose name he does not know. Valentina is the daughter of Count St. Bris, the leader of the Catholics.

II. The Second Act opens in the Gardens of Castle Chenonceaux, where Marguerite is surrounded by maids, who have just finished their toilet. Raoul, with his eyes bandaged, is led in. Marguerite commands him to remove the bandage. He does so, and is surprised to find himself in the presence of a beautiful woman, not knowing she was the Queen. Valentina enters at the Queen's desire, who wishes a union between the two, thus establishing a bond between the Protestant and Catholic parties. Raoul, believing Valentina to be faithless, refuses to comply with the Queen's wishes.

III. The Third Act opens with a scene on the banks of the Seine—the church of Notredame in the background. The blended sounds of Huguenot hymns, Catholic litanies, and the coarse revelry of the citizens, introduce a scene in which Valentina overhears a plot by her father, St. Bris, to assassinate Raoul. By the assistance of Marcel, Raoul's characteristic friend and follower, she prevents her father's base design from being carried out. St. Bris and Raoul meet outside the chapel for mortal combat, when the friends of both appear in force, and there is about to be a broil, when Marguerite enters and stops the conflict. Valentina also appears. Marguerite explains to Raoul that to Valentina he owes his life, and that his suspicions of her conduct in Nevers's house were unfounded. To his mortification it is too late to mend matters, for Nevers steps from a boat and leads Valentina off in the midst of an assemblage of his friends come to witness the nuptials.

IV. The Fourth Act describes a secret visit of Raoul to Valentina. Her friends come in; she conceals him, and he overhears the plot to carry out the massacre of the Huguenots on St. Bartholomew's Eve concocted. Nevers refuses to join his friends, who place him under supervision. After a scene of intense passion between Raoul and Valentina, the former, showing her through the window what is passing in the street below. The Catholics, headed by De Bris, enter and fire at his command, and in his haste and zeal De Bris finds he has caused his daughter's death.

with this gallery, the work of painting begins, the bridge being lowered as occasion requires. Frequently, however, the canvas is hung on pulleys from one of the gridiron beams and gradually lowered, the bridge remaining suspended between the prompt-side of the first fly-gallery and the o-p-side, thus forming a convenient crossing from one side of the house to the other for those at work in the upper stories, who would otherwise have to descend to the stage floor, cross it, and ascend several flights of stairs on the other side. Until within about a fortnight of the production of an opera or music-drama the work of preparation goes on in the buildings on either side of the stage and flies, and is not until that seemingly late period transferred to these latter.

At the production of the work the audience, comfortably seated, watches the performance unfold itself so smoothly that it suggests no idea of preliminary labor. This is as it should be. For as an actor must cause the result of his art to seem nature itself, so the theatrical manager must cause the action and its scenic surroundings to appear the spontaneous product of the time in which the drama or opera plays. We are apt to credit only the actor with the genius of simulating nature. As a matter of fact, the principle upon which he proceeds governs every detail of a theatrical or—to remain by the subject in hand—an operatic production. What the actor strives for, the manager, stage-manager, scene-painter, property-man, gas-engineer, master machinist, musical conductor, chorus, and principal singers are striving for. Each in his respective department is endeavouring to simulate nature. I emphasize simulate, because the simulation of nature as distinguished from the actual reproduction of nature is the peculiar province of stage art. It is a fact that a real tree upon the stage looks less like a real tree from the auditorium than a tree painted upon a piece of canvas; and that with a bit of cinders and a little paint the scene-painter can, at the expense of a few dollars, produce a Persian rug looking costlier and more like the real article than would an actual Persian rug costing a thousand dollars. What in real life would be exaggeration becomes on the stage perfect simulation of nature. The actor's natural bloom would be a ghostly pallor in the glare of the footlights, so that he is obliged to rouge his cheeks in order that their color may look natural. And as in this case the look of nature is produced by exaggeration, so it is with everything pertaining to stage art—voice, gesture, costume, scenery, "properties," light-effects. They must all, so to speak, be rouged. A stage production, to be successful, must be prepared with this principle always in view. It can easily be traced through the work going on behind the scenes of an opera-house.

When Napoleon III., before declaring war upon Prussia, asked one of his ministers if everything were in readiness for the army to move on Berlin, the latter replied: "To the last button on the last gaiter." Unless everything pertaining to an operatic performance is in readiness to the last papier-maché shield for the last "super," there will be an operatic Sedan. The operatic host must be placed on a war footing. Some idea of the labor this involves may be formed from the statement that at the Metropolitan Opera-House, it took from August, 1887, until January, 1888, to mobilize this host for the conquest of Mexico under "Ferdinand Cortez," a period of about the same length as that usually consumed at large opera-houses in preparing a work for production.

On the 1st of August, 1887, the managing director handed the libretto to the members of his staff. They immediately set to work to exhaust the bibliography of the episode lying at the basis of the action as thoroughly as though they intended to write a history. For they knew the production would have to be as far as possible a materialization of a page from history. They found the Despatches of Cortez and Charnay's work on Mexico of especial value, the illustrations in the latter suggesting designs for scenery, costumes, weapons, and other properties. The scenic artist and costumer came almost at the very outset of their investigations upon stumbling blocks in the way of "putting on their share in the production with historical accuracy. The buildings in which part of the opera plays were a mass of granite, and their faithful reproduction would have been inconsistent with the desired spectacular effect. The costumer, who was obliged to study both the Spanish and Mexican costumes of the period, discovered that the garbs of the Mexican women were not picturesque, while those of the Mexican priests were indecent. These matters were exhaustively discussed at a cabinet meeting in the managing director's office. It was decided, so far as the unbroken mass of granite and the costumes of the Mexican priests and women were concerned, to abandon historical accuracy, and, while retaining the architectural forms, to introduce some colors and to use the costumes of a somewhat later period. Here we observe that stage art demanded a sacrifice of historical accuracy, but that the semblance of the latter was maintained as far as possible. It became necessary to "theatreize" or idealize history. This is one of the most delicate problems presented to a conscientious theatrical manager. The solution is always in the line of the principle governing all theatrical productions—simulation. I am reminded here of a passage in Ruskin's "Modern Painters" to the effect that the true artist sees nature not as it really is, but idealized through his artist-imagination, and puts upon canvas only what his artist-soul allows his memory to retain. Similarly, those concerned in placing a work like "Ferdinand Cortez" upon the stage cannot be mere photographers of history.

On the Paint Bridge.

Meanwhile the property-master had made out a list of the articles to be manufactured in his department. He had not been hampered by the problem of historical accuracy. He found drawings of Mexican antiquities from which he made sketches of the Mexican implements of war and peace to be used in the opera, and from a genuine Mexican relic of that period, seen by chance in the show window of a store, he obtained his scheme for the principal property in the work, the image of the god Talepulka. He found he could have all these historically correct, except that he did not think it necessary to go to the length of decorating the idol with a paste made from a mixture of grain with human blood. A problem arose, however, when he considered the construction of the idol. He ascertained from the libretto that the idol and the back wall of the temple are shattered by an explosion, and that, just before the catastrophe, flames flash from the idol's eyes and mouth. He consulted with the gas-engineer, who had already considered the matter, and concluded that it would be most practical to produce the flames by means of gas supplied through a hose from the wings.

The property-master then made the following note in his pilot-book: "Flames leap up high from the heathen image—the gas-hose must be detached and drawn into the wings immediately afterward so as not to be visible when the image has fallen apart." The necessity of having the gas-hose detached determined the method of shattering the idol. It is a theatrical principle that a mechanical property should be so constructed that it can be worked by the smallest possible number of men. This principle was kept in view when the method of shattering Talepulka was determined upon. The god was divided from top to bottom into two irregular pieces. These were held together by a line, invisible from the audience, which was tied around the image near the pedestal. Another line, leading into the wings, was attached to the side of the top of one of the pieces. At the first report of the explosion a man concealed behind the pedestal, whose duty it also is to detach the gas-hose, cuts the line fastened around the idol, and the pieces slightly separate, so that the image seems to have cracked in two jagged pieces. At the next report a man in the wings pulls at the other line and the pieces fall apart.

MUSIC AMONG THE GREEKS.

"Music is pursued, not only as an alleviation of past toil * * * it has a power of forming character." (Aristotle).

"Song is to mortals of all things the sweetest." (Musaeus).

The Greeks in the flower of their culture gave to music a higher rank both in education and amusement than it has ever held since. The place, power, and value of music are most interestingly discoursed upon by Aristotle in his Politics. He argues in this connection that there is a certain kind of education which is to be valued because it is noble and liberal (not useful), and will enable us to take delight in pleasures of an elevated kind; under this head he places music saying: All men "agree that music is one of the "pleasantest things, whether with or without song." He goes further than this, claiming that music is not alone a recreation; he states distinctly: "It has power to form character," explaining his assertion thus: "Music conduces to virtue on the "ground that it can form our minds "and habituate us to true pleasures, "as our bodies are made by gymnastics to be of a certain character."

Aristotle's own words, as yet scarcely known in the world of music, are immortal, and should be familiar to every musician. Hear what he says of this noble art:

"It is clear then that there are "branches of learning and education "which we must study with a view "to the enjoyment of leisure, and "these are to be valued for their own sake; whereas those kinds of knowledge which are useful in business "are to be deemed necessary, and "exist for the sake of other things. "Therefore our fathers admitted "music into education, not on the "ground either of its necessity or "utility, for it is not necessary in the "same manner as reading and writing, which are useful in money-"making, and in the management of "a household; nor again like gymnastics which give health and "strength. There remains then the "use of music for intellectual enjoyment in leisure, which appears to "have been the reason of its introduction, this being one of the ways "in which it is thought that a free-"man should pass his leisure."

"With good reason music is introduced into social gatherings, because it makes the hearts of men glad; so that on this ground alone "we may assume that the young "ought to be trained in it. For innocent pleasures are not only in harmony with the perfect end of life, "but they also provide relaxation.

"And whereas men rarely attain "the end, but often rest by the way "and amuse themselves, . . it may "be well for them at times to find a "refreshment in music. . . Since "then music is a pleasure, and virtue consists in rejoicing and loving, "and hating aright, there is clearly "nothing which we are so much concerned to acquire and cultivate as "the power of forming right judg-"ments, and of taking delight in good "dispositions and noble actions. "Rhythm and melody supply imitations of anger and gentleness, also "of courage and temperance, and of "virtues and vices in general, which "hardly fall short of the actual affections, as we know from our own "experiences, for in listening to such "strains our souls undergo a change. "The habit of feeling pleasure or "pain at mere representations is not "far removed from the same feeling "about realities."

Aristotle goes on to enumerate the different kinds of music, classifying them according to the moral effect. Some kinds of music, he says, "make men sad and grave . . "others enfeeble the mind, others, "again, produce a moderate and settled temper, which appears to be "the peculiar effect of the Dorian; "the Phrygian inspires enthusiasm. "The same principles apply to "rhythms: some have a character of "rest, others of motion, and of these "latter again, some have a more "vulgar, others a nobler movement. "Enough has therefore been said to "show that music has a power of "forming the character, and should "therefore be introduced into the "education of the young."

As to musical education he says farther: "They who are to be "judges must also be performers. "The right measure will be attained "if students of music stop short of "the arts which are practised in pro-"fessional contests, and do not seek "to acquire those fantastic marvels "of execution which are now the "fashion. Let the young pursue "their studies until they are able to "feel delight in noble melodies and "rhythms, and not merely in that "common part of music in which "every slave or child, or even some "animals, find pleasure."

It is curious to note the influence ascribed to certain musical instruments. The flute, for instance, was branded as having a bad moral effect; Aristotle says "it is too exciting!" The Lydian harp came in the same category.

Purification was one of the offices of music. Aristotle mentions the use of certain "mystic melodies, which "bring healing and purification to the soul."

While the effect of the stage upon the public has nowhere been more fully recognized than in Greece (the cradle of the music-drama), we find in Aristotle the following powerful statement of the reverse action—the influence of the audience on the character of the performance and performers. "The vulgarity of the "spectator tends to lower the char-"acter of the music and therefore of "the performers; they look to him "—he makes them what they are, "and fashions even their bodies by "the movements which he expects "them to exhibit."

And all this is more than two thousand years old! Here we find expressed by a master of the art, thoughts which we imagined only those of the last quarter century had rightly grasped. And what has been said in our own day and generation of this mighty civilizer and educator —Music. George Eliot writes, "I "agree with you as to the inherent "superiority 'of music' . . painting "and sculpture are 'but an idealizing "of our existence.' Music 'arches "over this existence with another and "'diviner.'"

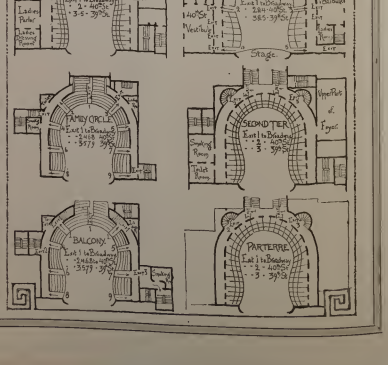
WAGNER ON MOZART.

It may be well to correct the absurd notion which Wagner's enemies have assiduously spread that he looked upon Mozart with the contempt of a superior genius. On the contrary, he says, in his "Oper und Drama":—"I point out to you again the glorious composer, in whom music was all that she can be in man, when she, in the fullness of her nature, is music wholly, and nothing but music. Look upon Mozart! Was he the less a musician because he was only thoroughly a musician, and was not and did not wish to be anything else but a musician? Look at "Don Giovanni." Where has music assumed such infinitely pure individuality, and where has she known so surely and directly to delineate character in richest and overflowing fullness as here?"

WEBER ANECDOTES.

One day Weber received an invitation from the Princess Maria Paulowna, to come to Weimar, and teach her some of his works, including the sonata in C which he had dedicated to her. On this subject he subsequently wrote to a friend: "The princess often says that she does not believe she will ever play the sonata properly as long as she lives. If she were not a princess, I should be at liberty to tell her that I fully agree with her."

At his publisher's office in Offenbach Weber for the first time saw an autograph of Mozart's, and his behavior on this occasion touchingly expressed his unbounded veneration for Mozart's genius. He laid it carefully on the table, and on bended knees pressed his forehead and lips to it, gazed at it with tears in his eyes, and then handed it back with the words, "Happy the paper on which his hand has rested."



From Scribner's Magazine, October 1888.

BEHIND THE SCENES OF AN OPERA-HOUSE.

BY GUSTAV KOBBE.

Soon after the curtain had risen on the first performance of Wagner's "Parsifal," at Baireuth, in July, 1882, my attention was suddenly attracted by a peculiar excrescence on one of the rocks in the left foreground of the stage. Gradually, as I looked, the excrescence assumed the shape of a human head, and some minutes afterward I was able to distinguish the face of Wagner himself outlined against the piece of rock scenery. At first I supposed he had ventured out too far from behind the scenes in order to observe the effect of his last music-drama upon the audience. But this supposition was dispelled by the circumstance that he rarely looked toward the auditorium. He seemed rather to be watching the singers on the stage. The face remained in view until the panoramic change of scene from the forest to the Castle of the Grail. It struck me as a curious circumstance that although I frequently looked at the face during the progress of the scene, it did not grow into any bolder relief against the rock, but remained almost as flat as though it had been painted into the scenery. Afterward I asked a number of friends in the audience if they had seen what I had. They had not; nor had others of whom they made inquiries. I was beginning to think that the appearance of Wagner's face against the rock was a freak of mirage, resulting perhaps from the positions of some of the lights behind the scenes, when I mentioned the matter to one of the principal singers in the cast. He manifested surprise, not at what I had discovered, but at my having discovered it. He then told me that weeks before the production of "Parsifal," Wagner had chalked little crosses on the stage to indicate the exact spots where he wanted the singers to stand and had also drawn lines to show the direction in which they were to move from one point to another;- and had himself drilled them in every movement. At the dress rehearsals and during the performance he had watched them, except during the first scene of the first act, from behind the scenes, in order to observe whether or not they closely followed his directions. Discovering that in the scene referred to he could not command a full view of the stage from any point at which he was entirely hidden from the audience, he had selected the place where I had noticed him, because there, when the stage was lighted, his complexion and the coloring of the scenery almost blended, and he considered himself safe from detection. I was much impressed at this incident. For it furnished a clue to the vast amount of labor which, unknown to the public, preceded the production of "Parsifal." If one detail in the performance had necessitated so much thought, drilling, and watchfulness, how much of these, beyond the most liberal estimate of the public, must have been developed during the long period of preparation. As I thought the matter over, the energy expended in the performance of the work dwindled into insignificance compared with that which must have been called into play while the work was preparing for production.

Some years later, amid entirely different surroundings—at the Metropolitan Opera-House, New York, during the cathedral scene in Meyerbeer's "Prophet"—I was reminded of my Baireuth experience. In the scene of "The Prophet" a brilliant pageant unfolded itself as smoothly as if it were regulated by a machine controlled in turn by the rhythm of the Coronation March; for each division of the procession came upon the stage with the first beat of the measure at which it made its appearance and kept step with the music. The stage-manager seemed to have calculated the exact interval of time which would be occupied by each division in crossing and going up the stage, for the soldiers who brought up the rear disappeared behind the scenes with the last chord of the march.

It then occurred to me that an audience sees but a small portion of a theatre. What goes on in the space above, beneath, behind, and on either side of the stage? Are not the unseen regions of a theatre more interesting perhaps than those that are seen? These questions arose in my mind during the performance of "The Prophet," as they had at Baireuth. In that instance I had been unable to follow up the subject. In the latter, however, I was more fortunate. For, through the courtesy of the managing director, I was enabled to penetrate the innermost recesses of an opera-house of the first rank, an establishment, a tour of discovery behind whose scenes reveals all the resources of the modern stage; inasmuch as one finds there not only everything pertaining to a theatre, but also the numerous and varied contrivances which have been devised for the production of the works of the modern German repertoire. This is especially true of the Metropolitan Opera-House, because every article used in the performances at that house is manufactured on the premises, and because in the special line of mechanical contrivances needed for the production of Wagner's works, now so prominently before the public, Yankee ingenuity has grafted many improvements on German designs, so that our opera-house, though young in years, has in stage craft a longer head than the old-established German opera-houses.

The regions in which the labor of preparing a musico-dramatic work for production goes on are a veritable bee-hive of activity. They embrace besides the rooms of the heads of the various departments—musical conductor, stage-manager, scenic artist, costumer, property-master, gas-engineer, and master carpenter—those in which their ideas are materialized. Connected, for instance, with the property department is a modelling-room, a casting-room, two rooms in which such properties as flowers, grass-mats, and birds are manufactured, two armories, and three or four apartments in which properties are stored—but this is taking the reader a little too far behind the footlights for the present. Before we begin our voyage of discovery it is well to box the theatrical compass.

The stage, properly speaking, is that portion of a theatre which can be seen from the auditorium, and the space on either side, behind the proscenium, utilized in shifting the "wings," as the side-scenes are called, when a scene is changing. The stage is width-wise divided into five parts. The side to the extreme left of the spectator is called the prompt-side. The prompter stands there in theatres in which there is no prompter's box. Half-way between the prompt-side and the point which marks half the width of the stage is the prompt-centre. Then there are the centre proper, and, corresponding with the prompt-centre and prompt-side, the opposite-prompt-centre and the opposite-prompt-side, or, as they are always called in theatrical parlance, the o-p-centre and o-p-side. The depth of the stage is divided into "entrances" according to the number of wings. Thus the "first-prompt-entrance" is between the proscenium and the first wing on the prompt-side. Corresponding with it on the opposite side is the first o-p-entrance." All these divisions and their appellations hold good not only of width and depth, but also of height. For instance, the prompt-centre extends from the floor of the stage to the beams far above—a height sometimes of 160 feet—to which are attached the pulleys and huge leverage wheels for running the ropes that lower and raise the drop-scenes.

Everything above the proscenium arch is summed up in the term "flies," a word more frequently misused than any other theatrical term, and wrongly defined even in the principal dictionaries of the English language. The uninitiated almost invariably use this term in speaking of the strips of canvas painted to resemble sky, foliage, arches, or the ceilings of interiors suspended across the stage above the wings. These are the "borders," and form but a small portion of the flies, which include the border-lights (rows of gas-jets running across the flies and illuminating the borders), innumerable ropes, cleets, pulleys, the beams to which these last are attached, and the fly-galleries on either side, from the lowest of which the drop-scenes and borders are worked. These galleries vary in number according to the size of the house. In opera-houses of the first rank they are four in number, so that the flies are four stories high. Then, from the prompt-side across to the o-p-side, stretch, a story higher, the beams already referred to. These in the aggregate have two names, according to the position of the person speaking of them. Looking upward from the floor of the stage, he would call them the gridiron, standing on the gallery, he would speak of them as the rigging-loft. The drops in large houses are about 56 feet high, and as they are raised, not rolled up, the space from the top of the borders, on a line with the first fly-gallery, to the gridiron is about 80 feet high, giving room for the drop and 24 feet of rope. There are five ropes to each drop—the prompt, prompt-centre, centre, o-p-centre, and o-p rope. These run from the gridiron down to the first fly-gallery, where they are fastened around cleets and from where they are worked.

While the floor of the stage runs from the footlights to the rear wall of the building, the entire depth is rarely utilized, because a section extending about eight feet forward from the rear wall is reserved for the paint-room. The floor of the paint-room is a platform called the paint-bridge, which extends across the stage and can be raised and lowered between the floor of the stage and the first fly-gallery. The canvas to be painted having been hung in position so that its top is level

ARGUMENT.

Act I. The rising curtain reveals a meadow near Antwerp, on which King Henry has assembled the nobles of Brabant. Count Telramund, whose offer of marriage had been refused by Elsa, Princess of Brabant, seeks to avenge himself by accusing her of having murdered her younger brother, in order that she might share the rule of the country with a secret lover. Elsa appears before the King, declares her innocence, and tells of a vision in which a knight appeared to her, promising to be her champion. The Herald's first call for her knight remains unanswered, but after the second a knight appears on a boat drawn by a swan. After making Elsa a promise never to ask him who he is or whence he came, he vanquishes Telramund, but generously spares his life.

Act II. Telramund and his wife Ortrud are before the palace. The two plot revenge, and Ortrud, who is a witch, knows that if she can induce Elsa to ask Lohengrin the forbidden question, he will have to leave her. So when Elsa, is about to enter the church, she takes her aside, and hints that Lohengrin is a sorcerer. Subsequently Telramund interrupts the bridal pair and accuses Lohengrin of witchcraft, but is obliged to yield to the popular indignation, and the bridal procession moves on.

Act III. Scene at the opening of Act III., represents the bridal chamber. The evil insinuations of Ortrud leave Elsa no peace, and, notwithstatding her husband's warning, she yields to her anxious curiosity and asks the fatal question about his name and home. Hardly has she uttered these words, when Telramund rushes in to assassinate Lohengrin, who, however, passes his own sword through his enemy. The scene changes to the same meadow seen in Act I. The body of Telramund is brought before the King and Lohengrin announces, that he is obliged to depart, and that he is one of the knights of the holy Grail whose mission is to assist innocent mortals in distress, but who can only do so on condition of concealing their origin. The swan now arrives to take him away, when Ortrud advances and announces that the swan is no one else than Elsa's brother, converted by Ortrud's magic arts into a swan. Lohengrin's prayer changes him back to human form, and a dove having taken its place, the knight departs.

with this gallery, the work of painting begins, the bridge being lowered as occasion requires. Frequently, however, the canvas is hung on pulleys from one of the gridiron beams and gradually lowered, the bridge remaining suspended between the prompt-side of the first fly-gallery and the o-p-side, thus forming a convenient crossing from one side of the house to the other for those at work in the upper stories, who would otherwise have to descend to the stage floor, cross it, and ascend several flights of stairs on the other side. Until within about a fortnight of the production of an opera or musicdrama the work of preparation goes on in the buildings on either side of the stage and flies, and is not until that seemingly late period transferred to these latter.

At the production of the work the audience, comfortably seated, watches the performance unfold itself so smoothly that it suggests no idea of preliminary labor. This is as it should be. For as an actor must cause the result of his art to seem nature itself, so the theatrical manager must cause the action and its scenic surroundings to appear the spontaneous product of the time in which the drama or opera plays. We are apt to credit only the actor with the genius of simulating nature. As a matter of fact, the principle upon which he proceeds governs every detail of a theatrical or—to remain by the subject in hand—an operatic production. What the actor strives for, the manager, stage-manager, scene-painter, property-master, gas-engineer, master machinist, musical conductor, chorus, and principal singers are striving for. Each in his respective department is endeavouring to simulate nature. I emphasize simulate, because the simulation of nature as distinguished from the actual reproduction of nature is the peculiar province of stage art. It is a fact that a real tree upon the stage looks less like a real tree from the auditorium than a tree painted upon a piece of canvas; and that with a bit of canvas and a little paint the scene-painter can, at the expense of a few dollars, produce a Persian rug looking costlier and more like the real article than would an actual Persian rug costing a thousand dollars. What in real life would be exaggeration becomes on the stage perfect simulation of nature. The actor's natural bloom would be a ghostly pallor in the glare of the footlights, so that he is obliged to rouge his cheeks in order that their color may look natural. And as in this case the look of nature is produced by exaggeration, so it is with everything pertaining to stage art—voice, gesture, costume, scenery, "properties," light-effects. They must all, so to speak, be rouged. A stage production, to be successful, must be prepared with this principle always in view. It can easily be traced through the work going on behind the scenes of an opera-house.

When Napoleon III., before declaring war upon Prussia, asked one of his ministers if everything were in readiness for the army to move on Berlin, the latter replied: "To the last button on the last gaiter." Unless everything pertaining to an operatic performance is in readiness to the last papier-maché shield for the last "super," there will be an operatic Sedan. The operatic host must be placed on a war footing. Some idea of the labor this involves may be formed from the statement that at the Metropolitan Opera-House it took from August, 1887, until January, 1888, to mobilize this host for the conquest of Mexico under "Ferdinand Cortez," a period of about the same length as that usually consumed at large opera-houses in preparing a work for production.

On the 1st of August, 1887, the managing director handed the libretto to the members of his staff. They immediately set to work to exhaust the bibliography of the episode lying at the basis of the action as thoroughly as though they intended to write a history. For they knew the production would have to be as far as possible a materialization of a page from history. They found the Despatches of Cortez and Charnay's work on Mexico of especial value, the illustrations in the latter suggesting designs for scenery, costumes, weapons, and other properties. The scenic artist and costumer came almost at the very outset of their investigations upon stumbling blocks in the way of "putting on their share in the production with historical accuracy. The buildings in which part of the opera plays were a mass of granite, and their faithful reproduction would have been inconsistent with the desired spectacular effect. The costumer, who was obliged to study both the Spanish and Mexican costumes of the period, discovered that the garbs of the Mexican women were not picturesque, while those of the Mexican priests were indecent. These matters were exhaustively discussed at a cabinet meeting in the maganging director's office. It was decided, so far as the unbroken mass of granite and the costumes of the Mexican priests and women were concerned, to abandon historical accuracy, and, while retaining the architectural forms, to introduce some colors and to use the costumes of a somewhat later period. Here we observe that stage art demanded a sacrifice of historical accuracy, but that the semblance of the latter was maintained as far as possible. It became necessary to "theatreize" or idealize history. This is one of the most delicate problems presented to a conscientious theatrical manager. The solution is always in the line of the principle governing all theatrical productions—simulation. I am reminded here of a passage in Ruskin's "Modern Painters" to the effect that the true artist sees nature not as it really is, but idealized through his artist-imagination, and puts upon canvas only what his artist-soul allows his memory to retain. Similarly, those concerned in placing a work like "Ferdinand Cortez" upon the stage cannot be mere photographers of history.

On the Paint Bridge.

Meanwhile the property-master had made out a list of the articles to be manufactured in his department. He had not been hampered by the problem of historical accuracy. He found drawings of Mexican antiquities from which he made sketches of the Mexican implements of war and peace to be used in the opera, and from a genuine Mexican relic of that period, seen by chance in the show window of a store, he obtained his scheme for the principal property in the work, the image of the god Talepulka. He found he could have all these historically correct, except that he did not think it necessary to go to the length of decorating the idol with a paste made from a mixture of grain with human blood. A problem arose, however, when he considered the construction of the idol. He ascertained from the libretto that the idol and the back wall of the temple are shattered by an explosion, and that, just before the catastrophe, flames flash from the idol's eyes and mouth. He consulted with the gas-engineer, who had already considered the matter, and concluded that it would be most practical to produce the flames by means of hose supplied through a hose from the wings.

The property-master then made the following note in his plot book: "Flames leap up high from the heathen image—the gas-hose must be detached and drawn into the wings immediately afterward so as not to be visible when the image has fallen apart." The necessity of having the gas-hose detached determined the method of shattering the idol. It is a theatrical principle that a mechanical property should be so constructed that it can be worked by the smallest possible number of men. This principle was kept in view when the method of shattering Talepulka was determined upon. The god was divided from top to bottom into two irregular pieces. These were held together by a line, invisible from the audience, which was tied around the image near the pedestal. Another line, leading into the wings, was attached to the side of the top of one of the pieces. At the first report of the explosion a man concealed behind the pedestal, whose duty it also is to detach the gas-hose, cuts the line fastened around the idol, and the pieces slightly separate, so that the image seems to have cracked in two jagged pieces. At the next report a man in the wings pulls at the other line and the pieces fall apart.

AIR FROM SULAMITH.

"I rose to unlock for my beloved, with sweet fragrant myrrh perfumed the limbs; I longed for my beloved in the night. I waited in vain—and I fell a-leep—Hark, it knocketh, hark!
The dearest voice sounds forth? 'Oh!
unlock, my love, my dearest sister!
my tender dove, my angel undefiled!
Tarry not, unlock my love, my angel unlock'—

"Trembling for joy, breathless with rapture, enchanted by his voice, how beats my heart with pulses longing for coming pleasures! I haste, draw the bolt quickly back—and gaze with terror into the vacant night!—Lo! I awake and see, it is a dream, a painful dream!—

"Oh, I charge you, daughters of Jerusalem, whene'er you meet my friend, tell him that I am sick with love's desire, tell my sorrows, the griefs of my tortured soul. Conjure him, as I conjure you, to haste, to come and kiss my sound again!"

137th PSALM.

By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept when we remembered Zion.

We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof.

For they that carried us away captive required of us a song; and they that wasted us required of us mirth, saying,
Sing us one of the songs of Zion.

How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?

If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do no: remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy.

RUBY ROYAL "Sec" of Henri Abelé

Alphonse Daudet, the vocalist, has addressed the following charming letter to M. Porel, of the Paris Odéon, on the occasion of the hundredth performance of "L'Arlésienne," with Bizet's music: "I remember one evening about fifteen years ago—is it fifteen years? I no longer remember the exact date—George Bizet and I stood trembling and pale against a side scene in the Vaudeville, and saw the same 'Arlésienne' crumbling under the indifference and fatigue of the audience. * * * Now they come, now they listen, because Bizet is dead and has become classical, because La-moreux leads the dance, perhaps also because my name is better known than it was fifteen years since. * * * They listen, thanks to you, my dear friend, who have had the courage to exhume at great expense a work which was buried alive, and which nobody remembered any more, not even myself.

Collier, in his Essay on Music, makes this curious suggestion: "I believe it is possible to invent an instrument that shall have quite a contrary effect to those martial ones now in use; an instrument that shall sink the spirits, and shake the nerves, and curdle the blood, and inspire despair, and cowardice, and consternation, at a surprising rate. It is probable the roaring of lions, the warbling of cats and screech owls, together with a mixture of the howling of dogs, judiciously imitated and compounded, might go a great way in this invention. Whether such anti-music as this might not be of service in a camp, I shall leave to the military men to consider.

When Schumann was a young man his finances were not always in a satisfactory condition, as may be inferred from the following extract from a letter to his mother: "I should like to have my hair cut, as it is a yard long, but haven't a copper to do it with. I ought to send several letters to Heidelberg, but have no money for the postage. What will the world think of me? My piano is horribly out of tune, but I cannot send for the tuner, etc., etc. I have not even enough to buy a pistol to shoot myself."

English opera does not seem to prosper in England. The London Times says concerning the past year:
"Mr. Rosa, dead, as usual, his short season at Drury Lane, but the financial result seems to have been so unsatisfactory that, as far as is known at present, he does not intend to repeat the experiment during the current year; and the distressing fact, therefore, must be acknowledged that the largest city in the world does not number sufficient lovers of high-class dramatic music to support a single opera sung in the language of the country. Perhaps one reason for this deplorable state of things is the growing acceptance which the wretched vulgarities of the music-hall on the one hand, and the insipid prettiness of the operetta on the other, meet with from the mass of the people. In the immediate neighborhood of Leicestersquare there are at this moment no less than four gorgeous establishments devoted to the so-called 'variety entertainments,' and all in highly flourishing condition.

WAGNER'S GRANDEST TRAG-EDY.

"DIE GÖTTERDÄMMERUNG," OR "THE DUSK OF THE GODS."

The first performance in America, at the Metropolitan Opera House, of "Die Götterdämmerung, the fourth drama in Wagner's gigantic Nibelung Tetralogy, will doubtless revive the dispute among opera-goers as to which of Wagner's works is the best. Many consider this drama—the last he wrote, with the exception of "Parsifal"— his greatest, and with good reason.
For, thanks to the Wagnerian system of leading motives, the four Nibelung dramas—"Rheingold," "Walkure," "Siegfried" and "Götterdämmerung" are related to each other musically as well as dramatically, and whenever there is a reference in the last drama to events which occurred in the preceeding ones, the music which illustrated them is heard again, so that "Götterdämmerung" is musically a complete synopsis, as it were, of the whole Tetralogy,

Several of the numbers of this drama have become familiar through performances in the concert hall, notably the Siegfried Funeral March (the grandest dirge ever written); the delicious trio of the Rhine maidens, who warn
Siegfried in the third act; Siegfried's
Rhine journey; and the final address of Brünnhilde before she dashes with her horse into the funeral pyre.

Scenically, the opera presents unprecedented opportunities. To mention only a few of the feaures—Siegfried's farewell to Brünnhilde—the morning dawn scene—the picturesque meeting with the Rhine daughters—the hunting scene and murder—the rising of the Rhine till it fills the stage, and the final conflagration, with the burning of Walhalla, the abode of the gods.

Although "Götterdämmerung" is the longest of Wagner's dramas, it is so brimful of inspired music that, as Saint Saëns remarks, the auditor "loses all sense of time as by a magic effect," and forgets to count the hours. The famous French composer adds that "from the elevation of the last act of the "Götterdämmerung" the whole Tetralogy appears, in its almost supernatural grandeur, like the chain of the Alps, seen from the summit of Mount Blanc.

The late Ferdinand Hiller relates that when he was in Paris, in 1840, Mendelssohn one day rushed into his room, in a state of great excitement.

"I have just witnessed a miracle!"
he exclaimed.

"What was it?" asked Hiller.

"Well, is not that a miracle?"
Mendelssohn responded. "I was at Erard's with Lisszt, and placed before him the manuscript of my concerto in G minor—and Lisszt played it at sight in the most perfect manner, although it is almost illegible; indeed, I could not be played more delightfully than he played it—it was wonderful!"

What would civilization be without the piano?—

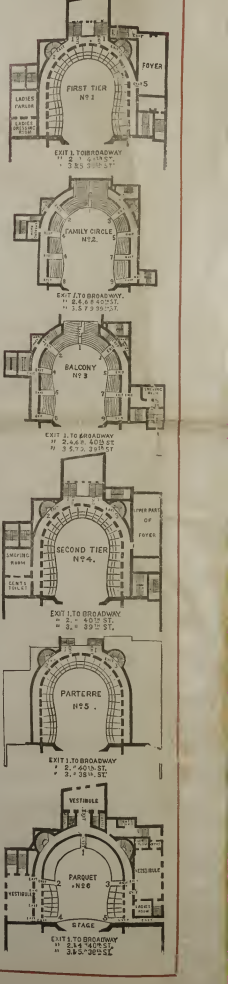
PLAN OF EXITS.



LISZT AND WAGNER CORRESPONDENCE.

Breitkopf & Härtel of Leipzig, have just published, in two volumes, the correspondence between Wagner and Liszt—a collection which is perhaps destined to be as widely read as the correspondence betw en Goethe and Schiller. For Liszt was Wagner's most intimate friend—the one to whom alone he confided all his ambitions, hopes, and sorrows at the early failures of works which are now sung and played the world over. Among the most notable things in Wagner's letters is the expression of deep-felt admiration for Liszt's orchestral compositions. "These," he writes, 'are a sort of monumental embodiment of your artistic personality, and as such so incomparably novel that the critics will require a long time to discover what they shall make of them." The volumes are beautifully pripted on thick paper

THE CANTATA.

Probably no form of musical composition has experienced such development as the cantata. The term in its primitive sense is of somewhat vague character, simply indicating some kind of vocal composition.

Originally, it was a combination of recitative and vocal melody with accompaniment, and Italian words. In some instances, as in Beethoven's "Adelaida," which he himself describes as a cantata, the recitative is absent; and two fully developed movements constitute its entire contents. Later, choruses were introduced in the cantata, and the scope of the work extended until in the present day it may be described as a species of oratorio or opera, to be sung without dramatic action. In like manner, the original form of solo cantata may be regarded as a scena, to be performed without the accessory of stage action.

Sometimes a continuous story is treated in cantata form, at others the text is of purely didactic character. In fact, any extended vocal composition for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra, intended to be performed on the concert and not on the operatic stage, is generically styled a cantata.

La Russie, Symphonic Poem by Rubinstein, is a glorification of the Empire of Russia. After a symphonic movement of a triumphant character the composer introduces melodies from all the provinces and races which make up the empire of Russia, in the following succession: Polish, Caucasian, German, Lettons, Esthonian, Tartar, Iceland, Little Russia, Hebrew, Bohemian, the whole closing with the Russian National Anthem.

THE "Dog's Head" brand of Ale and Stout well deserves its popularity.

WEBER'S EXTRAORDINARY MEMORY.

It is well known that the composer of "Euryanthe" was an ardent admirer of Mozart. That this love was not a mere matter of profession, but led him to study Mozart's works thoroughly, is shown by the following anecdote. One evening, when Weber was director for the German operas at Dresden the indisposition of a vocalist made it necessary at the last moment to substitute another opera. The only one available, without rehearsal, was the "Magic Flute." The singers were summoned when suddenly the discovery was made that the conductor's orchestral score had been left at Weber's house It was too late to send for it. The king and his retinue were already at the door of the opera house, and to keep them waiting would have been an unpardonable breech of etiquette. Weber alone preserved his composure. With a smile, he directed the musicians to take their places, and then lifted the baton for them to begin, just as the king entered the box. The musicians began, fearing an early collapse, but Weber conducted with an unerring hand through all the changes of tempo. He had the full score in his memory, and, as proof of it, he facetiously kept turning over the imaginary leaves, always at the right place. At the end of the act, the singers and musicians surrounded him and offered him their congratulations at his remarkable achievement. Meanwhile the score had arrived, and Weber was enabled to rest his memory.

The writer of the libretto of "Euryanthe," was Frau von Chezy—a half insane blue-stocking, who incessantly annoyed Weber with the changes which she made in the book, and the extravagant estimation she had of the importance of her own share in the work. On the night of the first performance, just before it began, there was a disturbance in the pit, with cries and shouts and shrieks of laughter, as a fat and shabbily-dressed woman pushed herself through the crowd, screaming out: "Make room, make room for me, I say! I tell you I am the poetess!" And the crowd yelling out, "The poetess! the poetess!" made way for her.

M. Jules Barbier, who is a candidate for the permanent direction of the Opera-Comique, states in reply to the attacks upon him in the Gil Blas, that the deficit in the receipts during his provisional management of the house amount to no more than 28.000fr. This, he says, is insignificant when we remember the events which have for some time interfered with the usual amusements of Parisians. He promises, if elected, to make a special feature of modern works, notably those of Massenet, Léo Delibes, Victorin Joncieres, and Théodore Dubois

WEBER'S "EURYANTHE."

WHAT GREAT MUSICIANS THINK OF IT.

One of the most important events of the operatic season will be the first performance in America of Weber's "Euryanthe," which he himself considered his best work, and on which Schumann, Wagner, Liszt and others have lavished the most enthusiastic praise.

Forty years ago, Schumann wrote in his "theatrical diary": "It is a long while since I have been so carried away with enthusiasm as this evening. This music is much too little known. It is heart-blood, the noblest he had; this opera cost him a portion of his life—unquestionably. But then it made him immortal.

The new German theatre in Prague was opened with Wagner's "Siegfried"

The capital invested in London in places of amusement is little short of $20,000,000, without reckoning places like the Crystal Palace and the Albert Hall Direct employment is given to about 150,000 people, besides indirect employment to a host of tradesmen and their workpeople. The theatres, music halls and concert halls have accommodation for about half a million. The capital invested in places of amusement in Great Britain (excluding Ireland, the Isle of Man, and the Channel Islands), and comprising about 550 towns and cities, is over $30,000,000. This gives direct employment to about 350,000 people, besides indirect employment to many more, and provides accommodation for nearly 1,250,000 spectators.

Stanford's new Symphony, "The Irish," contains several old Irish melodies. In the third movement the old lament known as "The Lament of the Sons of Usnach," has been utilized; and in the fourth movement the two principal themes are, "Remember the glories of Brian the Brave," and "Let him remember the days of old."

THE Dog's Head Ale and Stout, bottled in London by Read Bros., is the finest ever imported. Sold everywhere.

Count Hochberg's edict making full dress peremptory at the opera in Berlin, went into force a few days ago. Many ladies in street costumes and a few venturesome men in light coats appeared as protests against the order. In the first rank of boxes, reserved for the nobility, there was an approximation to the amount of dress usual in English opera houses; in the stalls, to which wealthy citizens were confined, many ladies neglected or refused to put on evening dress. Officers of the garrison added a good deal to the appearance of the house by wearing their brightest uniforms.

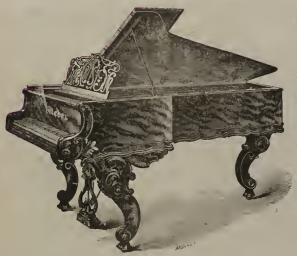
PIANOS.



THE WEBER PIANO is constructed from the musician's standpoint, as well as that of the mechanic; hence these instruments are distinguished from all others by that pure and sympathetic quality of tone that contains the greatest musical possibilities; that consummation of mechanical excellence that admits of the most delicate and impressive effects, while insuring the durability of the instrument, and that uniform superiority that enhances the pleasure of both performer and listener. Constructed from the very best materials and employing only the most skillful workmanship, these instruments combine the highest achievements in the art of piano making, and are comprehensively the best now made, and because of their great durability, power and sweetness of tone, they are the choice of the leading artists and the favorites of the concert room.

BEETHOVEN'S LAST CONCERT.

Seyfried relates the following serio-comic incident which occurred at Beethoven's last concert in Vienna, in 1808, when he was quite deaf, but still persisted in conducting.

He was playing a concerto of his own, but at the place where the orchestra joins the piano, forgetting that he was the soloist, he jumped up and began to conduct in his usual style. At the first sforzando he flung out his arms so violently that he extinguished both the lights on the piano desk. The audience laughed, and he was so put out by the disturbance, that he made the orchestra leave off and recommence. Seyfried, fearing lest the mishap would again occur when the same passage was repeated, sent for two choir boys to stand by Beethoven and hold the candles. One of them unsuspectingly drew near to look over the piano part; when the fatal sforzando arrived, he received such a smart slap in the face from Beethoven's right hand that he dropped his light in terror. The other boy, more cautious than his companion, had been anxiously following Beethoven's every movement, and by suddenly stooping, escaped the blow. The audience laughed more than ever, and this threw Beethoven into such a rage that he broke half a dozen strings at the first chords of the solo. All the efforts to restore quietness and attention were for the time fruitless. The first allegro of the concerto was therefore, quite lost. After this accident Beethoven would never give another concert.

WEBER VISITS BEETHOVEN.

Sir Julius Benedict thus relates how he met Beethoven at Vienna. One morning, in a music-store, Beethoven walked up to Benedict and asked: "You are Weber's pupil?" Benedict nodded in the affirmative. "Why doesn't he come to see me? Tell him to come to Baden with friend Haslinger." Asking for his tablet (Beethoven was entirely deaf at that time) Benedict wrote in it: "May I come too?" Beethoven smiled, and replied: "Yes, you saucy little fellow."

Some time later they drove out to see Beethoven. "We all felt strangely moved when entering the great man's poor, desolate-looking room; everything in the most appalling disorder—music, money, clothing on the floor, the bed unmade, broken coffee cups upon the table, the open pianoforte with scarcely any strings left and thickly covered with dust, while he himself was wrapped in a shabby old dressing-gown."

Beethoven recognized Weber at once, and, embracing him, shouted: "There you are, you devil of a fellow." They then began to converse on various topics, and when they finally left, Beethoven embraced Weber again and again. "Success to your new opera," ("Euryanthe") he exclaimed; if I can, I will come on the first night." These were his last words to Weber, and the two great composers never met again.

NEW ORATORIOS.

The enterprise and liberality of the Norwich (English) Festival Association has added two new works to the repertory of oratorio. This, however, is solely characteristic of the English festival associations, as American Festival originate nothing, and seem to have no other raison d'etre than to give employment to a few singers and musicians. We are indebted to the English for nearly all the oratorios in existence, from Handel down to Sullivan. The Norwich Festival Association gave commissions to two Italian musicians resident in London for original works, which were successfully produced at the recent festival. "The Garden of Olivet," by Signor Bottesini, is regarded by the critics as as possessing musical merit, but not rising to the dignity essential to a sacred composition. It is rather a series of graceful solos, duets, trios, and quartets connected by recitatives to preserve the narrative form. The music is not difficult, and its pleasing character will probably make it popular with choral societies. Mr. Santley and Mr. Lloyd, the tenor, who is shortly to visit the United States, were among the soloists who took part in the performance.

Signor Bottesini, the composer of "The Garden of Olivet," has long been known as a skillful double-bass player and as a composer of solos for that instrument, also as the composer of a successful opera, "Ero e Leander."

The other work, performed for the first time at the Norwich Festival, is of an entirely different character. This is "Isaiah," by Signor Mancinelli, who has during the last season conducted the orchestra at Drury Lane. His subject is the familiar story of "Sennacherib" and the overthrow of his host, a number of dramatic incidents taken from the Talmud being woven into the Scriptural narrative by Dr. Aldini, the libretist. The music of "Isaiah" is said to be of a distinctly original character, and some of it remarkably impressive. The prelude, illustrating the destruction of Sennacherib's host, is notably strong and vigorous, and the last number, given when peace is restored and the sun is supposed to be seen rising over the hills and towers of Jerusalem, is exquisitely beautiful.

La Russie, Symphonic Poem by Rubinstein, is a glorification of the Empire of Russia. After a symphonic movement of a triumphant character the composer introduces melodies from all the provinces and races which make up the empire of Russia, in the following succession: Polish, Caucasian, German, Lettons, Esthonian, Tartar, Iceland, Little Russia, Hebrew, Bohemian, the whole closing with the Russian National Anthem.

RUBY ROYAL "Sec" of Henri Abelé, Reims (the only red champagne in America), is an exquisite dry wine of exceptional merit. It can be had at all first-class hotels, restaurants and saloons.

MOZART ANECDOTES.

During the last hundred years Mozart's "Don Giovanni" has had 470 performances in Vienna, while in Paris Gounod's "Faust" has reached its five hundredth performance in 28 years. "Don Giovanni" was not at first received with much favor in Vienna, and after it had had 15 performances it disappeared from the repertory for 10 years!

The story that the Emperor Joseph remarked regarding this opera, when first given, that "this music is no food for the teeth of the Viennese," and that Mozart replied "let us leave them time to digest it," has been proved a mere invention, since the Emperor was absent from Vienna a the time the first 15 performances were given. It is true, however, that Mozart wrote the complicated overture to this opera on the night before the performance, and that the ink was hardly dry on the manuscript copies when they were handed to the musicians, who played the overture at sight. This feat is a remarkable one, even when it is borne in mind that Mozart was in the habit of elaborating his compositions in all their details in his mind before he put them on paper.

SALVATOR ROSA AS A LIBRETTIST.

In his recent work on "The Standard Cantatas," Mr. Upton gives the following curious information regarding the famous painter, Salvator Rosa.

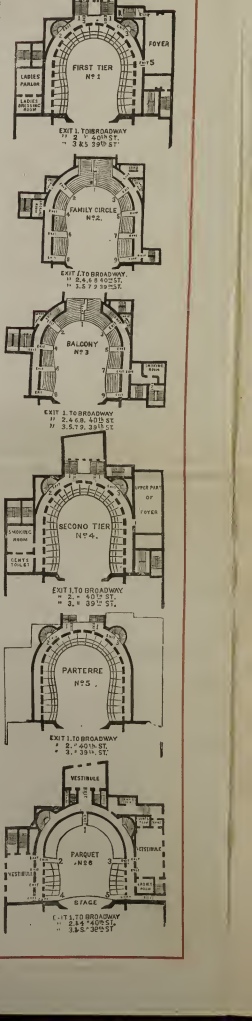
He not only wrote the words for many cantatas by his musical friends, but it is known that he composed both words and music to eight. The texts of these works have preserved for posterity pictures more graphic than any he colad paint of his misanthropic character: for when he is not railing against his mistress he is launching satires against Nature and mankind in general. In one of these he complains that the earth is barren and the sun is dark. If he goes out to see a friend, it always rains. If he goes on shipboard, it always storms. If he buys provisions at the market, the bones outweigh the flesh. His only wealth is hope, which points to nothing better than "workhouse or a rope." In the heat of summer he has to trudge in winter clothes. He cannot even run away from misfortune. In a word, nothing pleases the poor painter.

Jenny Lind plucked a spray of myrtle from her wedding wreath and planted it. The slip grew, and when she lay dead it furnished a chaplet for her coffin.

"A person who is not acquainted with the latest works in literature, is considered devoid of culture. Oh, that in music we were equally advanced!" exclaims Schumann.

The Paris municipality have again, as in previous years, offered a prize of 10,000 francs for the best choral and orchestral work, which is to be eventually performed in, and at the expense of, that town.

PLAN OF EXITS.



WAGNER'S GRANDEST TRAGEDY.

"DIE GÖTTERDÄMMERUNG," OR "THE DUSK OF THE GODS."

The first performance in America, at the Metropolitan Opera House, of "Die Götterdämmerung, the fourth drama in Wagner's gigantic Nibelung Tetralogy, will doubtless revive the dispute among opera-goers as to which of Wagner's works is the best Many consider this drama—the last he wrote, with the exception of "Parsifal"—his greatest, and with good reason. For, thanks to the Wagnerian system of leading motives, the four Nibelung dramas—"Rheingold," "Walküre," "Siegfried" and "Götterdämmerung" are related to each other musically as well as dramatically, and whenever there is a reference in the last drama to events which occurred in the preceeding ones, the music which illustrated them is heard again, so that "Götterdämmerung" is musically a complete synopsis, as it were, of the whole Tetralogy.

Several of the numbers of this drama have become familiar through performances in the concert hall, notably the Siegfried Funeral March (the grandest dirge ever written); the delicious trio of the Rhine maidens, who warn Siegfried in the third act; Siegfried's Rhine journey; and the final address of Brünnhilde before she dashes with her horse into the funeral pyre.

Scenically, the opera presents unprecedented opportunities. To mention only a few of the features—Siegfried's farewell to Brünnhilde—the morning dawn scene—the picturesque meeting with the Rhine daughters—the hunting scene and murder—the rising of the Rhine till it fills the stage, and the final conflagration, with the burning of Walhalla, the abode of the gods.

Although "Götterdämmerung" is the longest of Wagner's dramas, it is so brimful of inspired music that, as Saint Saëns remarks, the auditor "loses all sense of time as by a magic effect," and forgets to count the hours. The famous French composer adds that "from the elevation of the last act of the 'Götterdämmerung' the whole Tetralogy appears, in its almost supernatural grandeur, like the chain of the Alps, seen from the summit of Mount Blanc.

Stanford's new Symphony, "The Irish," contains several old Irish melodies. In the third movement the old lament known as "The Lament of the Sons of Usnach," has been utilized; and in the fourth movement the two principal themes are, "Remember the glories of Brian the Brave," and "Let him remember the days of old."

THE "Dog's Head" brand of Ale and Stout well deserves its popularity.

LISZT AND WAGNER CORRESPONDENCE.

Breitkopf & Härtel of Leipzig, have just published, in two volumes, the correspondence between Wagner and Liszt—a collection which is perhaps destined to be as widely read as the correspondence betw en Goethe and Schiller. For Liszt was Wagner's most intimate friend—the one to whom alone he confided all his ambitions, hopes, and sorrows at the early failures of works which are now sung and played the world ov-r. Among the most notable things in Wagner's letters is the expression of deep-felt admiration for Liszt's orchestral compositions. "These," he writes, "are a sort of monumental embodiment of your artistic personality, and as such so incomparably novel that the critics will require a long time to discover what they shall make of them." The volumes are beautifully printed on thick paper.

WEBER'S "EURYANTHE."

WHAT GREAT MUSICIANS THINK OF IT.

One of the most important events of the operatic season will be the first performance in America of Weber's "Euryanthe," which he himself considered his best work, and on which Schumann, Wagner, Liszt and others have lavished the most enthusiastic praise.

Forty years ago, Schumann wrote in his "theatrical diary": "It is a long while since I have been so carried away with enthusiasm as this evening. This music is much too little known. It is heart-blood, the noblest he had; this opera cost him a portion of his life—unquestionably. But then it made him immortal.

M. Jules Barbier, who is a candidate for the permanent direction of the Opera Comique, states in reply to the attacks upon him in the Gil Blas, that the deficit in the receipts during his provisional management of the house amount to no more than 28,000f. This, he says, is insignificant when we remember the events which have for some time interfered with the usual amusements of Parisians. He promises, if elected, to make a special feature of modern works, notably those of Massenet, Léo Delibes, Victorin Joncieres, and Théodore Dubois.

"The pleasure which the work of a musician affords you is his very lifeblood; the trouble it has cost him you do not know. He gives you his very best: the essence of his life, the outflow of his genius; and yet you grudge him a simple wreath of flowers!"—Schumann.

"Music belongs to no country," says Weber, "and we value beautiful music from whatever part of the globe it may come."

WEBER'S EXTRAORDINARY MEMORY.

It is well known that the composer of "Euryanthe" was an ardent admirer of Mozart. That this love was not a mere matter of profession, but led him to study Mozart's works thoroughly, is shown by the following anecdote. One evening, when Weber was director for the German operas at Dresden the indisposition of a vocalist made it necessary at the last moment to substitute another opera. The only one available, without rehearsal, was the "Magic Flute." The singers were summoned, when suddenly the discovery was made that the conductor's orchestral score had been left at Weber's house It was too late to send for it. The king and his retinue were already at the door of the opera house, and to keep them waiting would have been an unpardonable breech of etiquette. Weber alone preserved his composure. With a smile, he directed the musicians to take their places, and then lifted the baton for them to begin, just as the king entered the box. The musicians began, fearing an early collapse, but Weber conducted with an unerring hand through all the changes of tempo. He had the full score in his memory, and, as proof of it, he facetiously kept turning over the imaginary leaves, always at the right place At the end of the act, the singers and musicians surrounded him and offered him their congratulations at his remarkable achievement. Meanwhile the score had arrived, and Weber was enabled to rest his memory.

THE CANTATA.

Probably no form of musical composition has experienced such development as the cantata. The term in its primitive sense is of somewhat vague character, simply indicating some kind of vocal composition.

Originally, it was a combination of recitative and vocal melody with accompaniment, and Italian words. Later, choruses were introduced in the cantata, and the scope of the work extended until in the present day it may be described as a species of oratorio or opera, to be sung without dramatic action. In like manner, the original form of solo cantata may be regarded as a scena, to be performed without the accessory of stage action.

Sometimes a continuous story is treated in cantata form, at others the text is of purely didactic character. In fact, any extended vocal composition for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra, intended to be performed on the concert and not on the operatic stage, is generically styled a cantata.

La Russie, Symphonic Poem by Rubinstein, is a glorification of the Empire of Russia. After a symphonic movement of a triumphant character the composer introduces melodies from all the provinces and races which make up the empire of Russia, in the following succession: Polish, Caucasian, German, Lettons, Esthonian, Tartar, Iceland, Little Russia, Hebrew, Bohemian, the whole closing with the Russian National Anthem.

WEBER VISITS BEETHOVEN.

Sir Julius Benedict thus relates how he met Beethoven at Vienna. One morning, in a music store, Beethoven walked up to Benedict and asked: "You are Weber's pupil?" Benedict nodded in the affirmative. "Why doesn't he come to see me? Tell him to come to Baden with friend Haslinger." Asking for his tablet (Beethoven was entirely deaf at that time) Benedict wrote in it: "May I come too?" Beethoven smiled, and replied: "Yes, you saucy little fellow."

Some time later they drove out to see Beethoven. "We all felt strangely moved when entering the great man's poor, desolate-looking room, everything in the most appalling disorder —music, money, clothing on the floor, the bed unmade, broken coffee cups upon the table, the open pianoforte with scarcely any strings left and thickly covered with dust, while he himself was wrapped in a shabby old dressing-gown."

Beethoven recognized Weber at once, and, embracing him, shouted: "There you are, you devil of a fellow." They then began to converse on various topics, and when they finally left, Beethoven embraced Weber again and again. "Success to your new opera," ("Euryanthe") he exclaimed; if I can, I will come on the first night." These were his last words to Weber, and the two great composers never met again.

GOLDMARK IN GERMANY.

A Dresden correspondent writes to the London Musical Times: "About four and twenty years ago, a Saxon Count, whose sensibility would be shocked were he ever to read his name in print, appealed to Rubenstein on behalf of a young Jew, needy, but highly gifted, and earning a scanty living by copying music. The result was that, through the generosity of the composer, the struggling genius was enabled to develop his latent powers, and finally to produce two lyrical works which never fail to draw a closely packed audience in more than one large German town, especially in those of Saxony. The young man's name was Carl Goldmark. It would be too exacting to call upon a writer of modern opera to ignore all the improvements of a powerful predecessor for the mere purpose of avoiding a charge of plagiarism; and Goldmark requires the full benefit of this license; for no doubt, his light, around which the Dresdeners so love to hover, is to a great extent a borrowed one and his admirers are paying an unconscious tribute to the hero of Bayreuth when they crowd to hear "The Queen of Sheba" and "Merlin;" but there is a sufficient residuum of power and originality to make those works a feature of the day. Fraulein Malten, in the part of Viviana, shows a voice unimpaired by the stern ordeal to which for nearly twelve years she has been subjected as the leading exponent of the Wagner school. Whether as the womanly Elsa, the stately Queen of Sheba, or the ingénue in the "Meistersinger," she is equally at home; nothing can be fresher than her maidenly confusion on receiving a bouquet from Walther in the last mentioned work. Her ignorance of the world in general, and men in particular, seems actually to increase with her years; one can hardly imagine what her artlessness will be at the age of sixty."

SPONTINI.

It is well known that Schumann had a little "Theatrical Note Book," in which he occasionally jotted down a few comments on operas he happened to hear. An entry on July 27, 1848, relates to Spontini's "Ferdinand Cortez." It is brief but pithy: "Heard this opera for the first time. Delighted with it."

Dr. Naumann says that "no other composer has succeeded in infusing into music the spirit of heroism and glory which prompted the victorious exploits of Napoleon, in portrayal of which Spontini created a kind of artistic expression, the influence of which has extended to the present day."

When Spontini first came to Paris he encountered much opposition, but the Empress Josephine appointed him court composer, and the Emperor also became his friend, giving him $2,000 from his private purse for the opera "La Vestale," in addition to the ten thousand francs which the Conservatoire gave every ten years as a prize to the composer of the best opera of the decade.

It was at Napoleon's request that Spontini composed his second grand opera, "Ferdinand Cortez." The total failure of his Spanish campaign caused Napoleon, however, to take such a violent dislike to the subject of the opera, that he prevented its production by a special decree. Subsequently, however, it was given with enormous success.

RUBY ROYAL "SEC" of Henri Abelé, Reims (the only red champagne in America), is an exquisite dry wine of exceptional merit. It can be had at all first-class hotels, restaurants and saloons.

THE CANTATA.

Probably no form of musical composition has experienced such development as the cantata. The term in its primitive sense is of somewhat vague character, simply indicating some kind of vocal composition.

Originally, it was a combination of recitative and vocal melody with accompaniment, and Italian words. In some instances, as in Beethoven's "Adelaida," which he himself describes as a cantata, the recitative is absent; and two fully developed movements constitute its entire contents. Later, choruses were introduced in the cantata, and the scope of the work extended until in the present day it may be described as a species of oratorio or opera, to be sung without dramatic action. In like manner, the original form of solo cantata may be regarded as a scena, to be performed without the accessory of stage action.

Sometimes a continuous story is treated in cantata form, at others the text is of purely didactic character. In fact, any extended vocal composition for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra, intended to be performed on the concert and not on the operatic stage, is generically styled a cantata.

SALVATOR ROSA AS A LIBRETTIST.

In his recent work on "The Standard Cantatas," Mr. Upton gives the following curious information regarding the famous painter, Salvator Rosa.

He not only wrote the words for many cantatas by his musical friends, but it is known that he composed both words and music to eight. The texts of these works have preserved for posterity pictures more graphic than any he colud paint of his misanthropic character: for when he is not railing against his mistress he is launching satires against Nature and mankind in general. In one of these he complains that the earth is barren and the sun is dark. If he goes out to see a friend, it always rains. If he goes on shipboard, it always storms. If he buys provisions at the market, the bones outweigh the flesh. His only wealth is hope, which points to nothing better than "workhouse or a rope." In the heat of summer he has to trudge in winter clothes. He cannot even run away from misfortune. In a word, nothing pleases the poor painter.

Mr. W. S. Gilbert finds a piece of blotting paper by his side a great help when he is writing comic operas. This is not for blotting his manuscripts, but for drawing pictures on. These are caricatures, and oftener the sketch suggests a quaint thought than a thought suggests the sketch.

WEBER'S EXTRAORDINARY MEMORY.

It is well known that the composer of "Euryanthe" was an ardent admirer of Mozart. That this love was not a mere matter of profession, but led him to study Mozart's works thoroughly, is shown by the following anecdote. One evening, when Weber was director for the German operas at Dresden the indisposition of a vocalist made it necessary at the last moment to substitute another opera. The only one available, without rehearsal, was the "Magic Flute." The singers were summoned, when suddenly the discovery was made that the conductor's orchestral score had been left at Weber's house. It was too late to send for it. The king and his retinue were already at the door of the opera house, and to keep them waiting would have been an unpardonable breech of etiquette. Weber alone preserved his composure. With a smile, he directed the musicians to take their places, and then lifted the baton for them to begin, just as the king entered the box. The musicians began, fearing an early collapse, but Weber conducted with an unerring hand through all the changes of tempo. He had the full score in his memory, and, as proof of it, he facetiously kept turning over the imaginary leaves, always at the right place. At the end of the act, the singers and musicians surrounded him and offered him their congratulations at his remarkable achievement. Meanwhile the score had arrived, and Weber was enabled to rest his memory.

WOMEN OF THE WEST.

Joaquin Miller says there is a touch of solemnity in the face and character of California women, absent from all other women of this earth. Notwithstanding the large infusion of Spanish and other dark blood, he asserts that the California woman generally has golden hair. He also notes her early development. He was called upon to address the young ladies of Mills' Seminary—the Vassar of the West—and before he had been five minutes on the stand he found he was "speaking to women—women in body and mind." He admits there are many beautiful women in New York and London, and expresses his unbounded admiration for Mrs. Langtry; yet, he adds, that he can find in California twenty Langtrys any day. California women, he says, are the best dressed he ever saw. He especially commends them for disliking "that beastly abomination unto the Lord—the bustle," and for their fondness, on the other hand, of color in their dresses. This, he says, "cannot reach sombre Philadelphia and sedate Boston too soon."

THE "Dog's Head" brand of Ale and Stout well deserves its popularity.

MOZART ANECDOTES.

During the last hudred years Mozart's "Don Giovanni" has had 470 performances in Vienna, while in Paris Gounod's "Faust" has reached its five hundredth performance in 28 years "Don Giovanni" was not at first received with much favor in Vienna, and after it had had 15 performances it disappeared from the repertory for 10 years!

The story that the Emperor Joseph remarked regarding this opera, when first given, that "this music is no food for the teeth of the Viennese," and that Mozart replied "let us leave them time to digest it," has been proved a mere invention, since the Emperor was absent from Vienna a the time the first 15 performances were given. It is true, however, that Mozart wrote the complicated overture to this opera on the night before the performance, and that the ink was hardly dry on the manuscript copies when they were handed to the musicians, who played the overture at sight. This feat is a remarkable one, even when it is borne in mind that Mozart was in the habit of elaborating his compositions in all their details in his mind before he put them on paper.

BEETHOVEN'S LAST CONCERT.

Seyfried relates the following seriocomic incident which occurred at Beethoven's last concert in Vienna, in 1808, when he was quite deaf, but still persisted in conducting.

He was playing a concerto of his own, but at the place where the orchestra joins the piano, forgetting that he was the soloist, he jumped up and began to conduct in his usual style. At the first sforzando he flung out hid arms so violently that he extinguishes both the lights on the piano desk. The audience laughed, and he was so put out by the disturbance, that he made the orchestra leave off and recommence. Seyfried, fearing lest the mishap would again occur when the same passage was repeated, sent for two choir boys to stand by Beethoven and hold the candles. One of them unsuspectingly drew near to look over the piano part; when the fatal sforzando arrived, he received such a smart slap in the face from Beethoven's right hand that he dropped his light in terror. The other boy, more cautious than his companion, had been anxiously following Beethoven's every movement, and by suddenly stooping, escaped the blow. The audience laughed more than ever, and this threw Beethoven into such a rage that he broke half a dozen strings at the first chords of the solo. All the efforts to restore quietness and attention were for the time fruitless. The first allegro of the concerto was, therefore, quite lost. After this accident Beethoven would never give another concert.

NEW ORATORIOS.

The enterprise and liberality of the Norwich (English) Festival Association has added two new works to the repertory of oratorio. This, however, is solely characteristic of the English festival associations, as American Festival originate nothing, and seem to have no other raison d'etre than to give employment to a few singers and musicians. We are indebted to the English for nearly all the oratorios in existence, from Handel down to Sullivan. The Norwich Festival Association gave commissions to two Italian musicians resident in London for original works, which were successfully produced at the recent festival. "The Garden of Olivet," by Signor Bottesini, is regarded by the critics as as possessing musical merit, but not rising to the dignity essential to a sacred composition. It is rather a series of graceful solos, duets, trios, and quartets connected by recitatives to preserve the narrative form. The instrumentation is difficult, and its pleasing character will probably make it popular with choral societies. Mr. Santley and Mr. Lloyd. the tenor, who is shortly to visit the United States, were among the soloists who took part in the performance.

Signor Bottesini, the composer of "The Garden of Olivet," has long been known as a skilful double-bass player and as a composer of solos for that instrument, also as the composer of a successful opera, "Ero e Leander."

The other work, performed for the first time at the Norwich Festival, is of an entirely different character. This is "Isaiah," by Signor Mancinelli, who has during the last season conducted the orchestra at Drury Lane. His subject is the familiar story of "Sennacherib" and the overthrow of his host, a number of dramatic incidents taken from the Talmud being woven into the Scriptural narrative by Dr. Aldini, the librettist. The music of "Isaiah" is said to be of a distinctly original character, and some of it remarkably impressive. The prelude, illustrating the destruction of Sennacherib's host, is notably strong and vigorous, and the last number, given when peace is restored and the sun is supposed to be seen rising over the hills and towers of Jerusalem, is exquisitely beautiful.

Jenny Lind plucked a spray of myrtle from her wedding wreath and planted it. The slip grew, and when she lay dead it furnished a chaplet for her coffin.

A very funny story is told by one of the most pleasing Marguerite's of the day concerning her experience with a diffident Faust in Gounod's opera. She had done her best to make him assume an affectionate attitude, and finally, in his desperate attempt to comply with her demands, he clutched her about the waist and hung to the ends of the false braids which depended from her wig in sheer desperation. Her feelings beggar description as she felt her wig taking leave of her head just as she poured forth her most passionate love measures in the arms of her Faust. Taking advantage of a rest, she said: "Just let alone of my wig, or I'll settle you when I get a chance," and with the relief incidental to the reassurance gained by her release, she finished the great duet and saved her head covering.

"Observe," says Carlyle, "how all passionate language does of itself become musical,—with a finer music than the mere accent; the speech of man even in jealous anger becomes a chant—a song. All deep things are song."

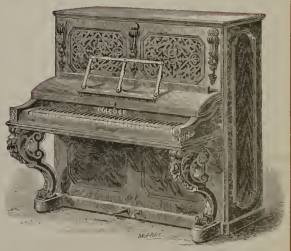
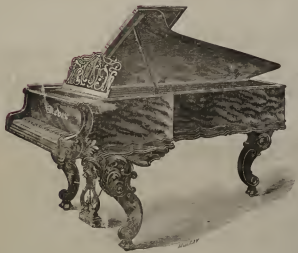
PIANOS.





THE WEBER PIANO is constructed from the musician's standpoint, as well as that of the mechanic: hence these instruments are distinguished from all others by that pure and sympathetic quality of tone that contains the greatest musical possibilities; that consummation of mechanical excellence that admits of the most delicate and impressive effects, while insuring the durability of the instrument, and that uniform superiority that enhances the pleasure of both performer and listener. Constructed from the very best materials and employing only the most skillful workmanship, these instruments combine the highest achievements in the art of piano making, and are comprehensively the best now made, and because of their great durability, power and sweetness of tone, they are the choice of the leading artists and the favorites of the concert room.

M. Jules Barbier, who is a candidate for the permanent direction of the Opera-Comique, states in reply to the attacks upon him in the Gil Blas, that the deficit in the receipts during his provisional management of the house amount to no more than 28,000f. This, he says, is insignificant when we remember the events which have for some time interfered with the usual amusements of Parisians. He promises, if elected, to make a special feature of modern works, notably those of Massenet, Léo Delibes, Victorin Joncieres, and Théodore Dubois.

LISZT AND WAGNER CORRESPONDENCE.

Breitkopf & Härtel of Leipzig, have just published, in two volumes, the correspondence between Wagner and Liszt—a collection which is perhaps destined to be as widely read as the correspondence between Goethe and Schiller. For Liszt was Wagner's most intimate friend—the one to whom alone he confided all his ambitions, hopes, and sorrows at the early failures of works which are now sung and played the world over. Among the most notable things in Wagner's letters is the expression of deep-felt admiration for Liszt's orchestral compositions. "These," he writes, "are a sort of monumental embodiment of your artistic personality, and as such so incomparably novel that the critics will require a long time to discover what they shall make of them." The volumes are beautifully printed on thick paper.

MR. EDMUND C. STANTON, Director of the Metropolitan Opera House, has acquired the sole right for the United States and Canada of the production of all of Wagner's operas.

The horses used at the Metropolitan Opera House are furnished by the Central Park Riding Academy, Seventh avenue, between 58th and 59th Streets.

A very funny story is told by one of the most pleasing Marguerite's of the day concerning her experience with a dilidient Faust in Gounod's opera. She had done her best to make him assume an affectionate attitude, and finally, in his desperate attempt to comply with her demands, he clutched her about the waist and hung to the ends of the false braids which depended from her wig in sheer desperation. Her feelings beggar description as she felt her wig taking leave of her head just as she poured forth her most passionate love measures in the arms of her Faust. Taking advantage of a rest, she said: "Just let alone of my wig, or I'll settle you when I get a chance," and with the relief incidental to the reassurance gained by her release, she finished the great duet and saved her head covering.

THE "Dog's Head" brand of Ale and Stout well deserves its popularity.

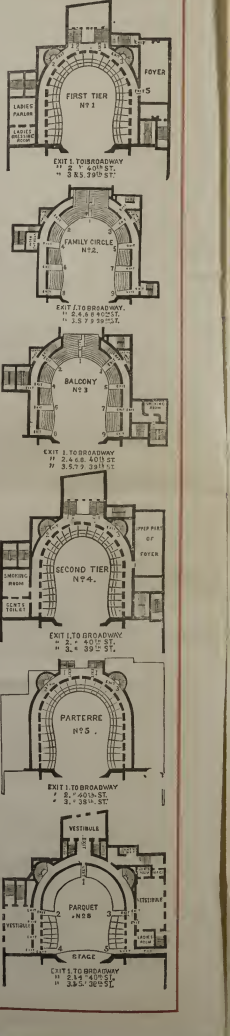
During the last two weeks of the Season, from February 6 to February 18, the Nibelungen Trilogy, consisting of DIE WALKURE, SIEGFRIED and DIE GOETTERDÄMMERUNG will be given.

AN interesting question once arose as to what manner of life contributed most to longevity. A list of 110 men in each of these departments was prepared, and the average length of life compared. Men of science, men of art, men of action. The average length of life among scientific men was 69½ years; among men of artistic temperament, 64¾ years; and among men of motion, 61 years. The oldest of each list were Fontenelle, Titian and Dandalo, while not far behind were such names as Humboldt, Bossuet, Newton, Herschel, Franklin, Plato, Kant, Galileo, Angelo, Voltaire, Goethe, Hans Lachs, Wellington, Jefferson, Augustus, Frederic the Great and Charlemagne. The three youngest celebrities were Bichat, Keats and the Emperor Otho II., followed by Pascal, Spinoza, Chopin, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Byron, Burns, Raphael, Coreggio, Van Dyke, Goldsmith, Spenser, Alexander the Great and Gustavus Adolphus.

PLAN OF EXITS.



WAGNER'S GRANDEST TRAGEDY.

"DIE GÖTTERDÄMMERUNG," OR "THE DUSK OF THE GODS."

The first performance in America, at the Metropolitan Opera House, of "Die Götterdämmerung, the fourth drama in Wagner's gigantic Nibelung Tetralogy, will doubtless revive the dispute among opera-goers as to which of Wagner's works is the best. Many consider this drama—the last he wrote, with the exception of "Parsifal"—his greatest, and with good reason. For, thanks to the Wagnerian system of leading motives, the four Nibelung dramas — "Rheingold," "Walküre," "Siegfried" and "Götterdämmerung" are related to each other musically as well as dramatically, and whenever there is a reference in the last drama to events which occurred in the preceding ones, the music which illustrated them is heard again, so that "Götterdämmerung" is musically a complete synopsis, as it were, of the whole Tetralogy.

Several of the numbers of this drama have become familiar through performances in the concert hall, notably the Siegfried Funeral March (the grandest dirge ever written); the delicious trio of the Rhine maidens, who warn Siegfried in the third act; Siegfried's Rhine journey; and the final address of Brünnhilde before she dashes with her horse into the funeral pyre.

Scenically, the opera presents unprecedented opportunities. To mention only a few of the features—Siegfried's farewell to Brünnhilde—the morning dawn scene—the picturesque meeting with the Rhine daughters—the hunting scene and murder—the rising of the Rhine till it fills the stage, and the final conflagration, with the burning of Walhalla, the abode of the gods.

Although "Götterdämmerung" is the longest of Wagner's dramas, it is so brimful of inspired music that, as Saint Saëns remarks, the auditor "loses all sense of time as by a magic effect," and forgets to count the hours. The famous French composer adds that "from the elevation of the last act of the 'Götterdämmerung' the whole Tetralogy appears, in its almost supernatural grandeur, like the chain of the Alps, seen from the summit of Mount Blanc.

"No amount of adverse criticism can detract in any way from the intrinsic value of a composition," says Ludwig Spohr.

A Viennese critic notes that Mozart's "Don Giovanni" is the first opera of any consequence which has been generally performed a hundredth birthday has come and gone. Few operas live longer than that. It is probable that the "Meistersinger," which will be thus commemorated in 1967, will be thus remembered in 2067, as are Beethoven's "Fidelio," in 1905, and Weber's "Freischutz," in 1921.

Die Walküre

Brünnhilde ist die Tochter Wotan's, des höchsten Gottes der nordischen Mythologie. Sie ist eine der Walküren, deren Pflicht es ist die Seelen gefallner Helden nach Walhalla zu bringen.

I. AKT.—Siegmund, ein Sohn Wotan's und ein Sterblicher, hat im Kampfe sein Schwert verloren und flieht nun vor seinen Feinden. Todmüde tritt er, ohne es zu ahnen, in die Hütte seines Feindes Hunding, und sinkt am Heerde nieder. Sieglinde, Hunding's Weib erscheint und bietet ihm Speise und Trank. Hunding kehrt zurück, erkennt seinen Gast und fordert ihn zum Kampf auf den Mo gen. Sieglinde mischt einen Schlaftrunk in Hunding's Becher, und kehrt, nachdem er schläft, zu Siegmund zurück. Siegmund erkennt in ihr alsbald seine Geliebte und Zwillingsschwester. Man hatte sie geraubt und gegen ihren Willen an Hunding verheirat et. Sie erzählt Siegmund von dem Schwert des Wotan an ihrem Hochzeitstag in den grossen Baum g esteckt hatte. Siegmund zieht es heraus, mit überm enschlicher Kraft, und entflieht mit Sieglinde.

II. AKT.—Hunding verfolgt die Flüchtigen. Wotan trifft Brünnhilde und befiehlt ihr in dem Zweikampf dem Siegmund zu helfen. Als r Fricka, Wotan's Gattin, verlangt den Tod des ehebrecherischen Siegmund; und Wotan befiehlt nun Brünnhilde Siegmund "nicht" zu helfen. Man hört Hunding's Horn, und die Flüchtigen erscheinen auf der Bühne. Brünnhilde kündigt dem Siegmund er müsse sterben; er aber will sich nicht von Sieglinde trennen. bi. Brünnhilde verspricht ihn vor dem Tode zu schützen. Zweikampf in dem von Wolken umhüllten Gebirge. Brünnhilde hilft Siegmund, aber unsonst; denn Wotan erscheint und zerschlägt sein Schwert.

III. AKT. Ritt der Walküren, die sich auf einem Felsen sammeln. Brünnhilde kommt zuletzt, von Wotan verfolgt. Die Walküren bitten für sie, aber Wotan bestraft sie für ihren Ungehorsam, indem er sie in einen tiefen, magnetischen Schlaf versenkt. Wotan's Abschied. Feuerzauber.

A PUBLISHER of this city said some time since that not more than one out of every twenty books written is ever published. Even a less proportion of magazine and journal literature is accepted. A great many of the disappointed writers are women. Miss Muhlbach was very open in saying that if she could have earned as much money by the more feminine occupation of scrubbing and sweeping, she would have much preferred that employment. This sounds neither admirable nor credible from such a source, yet would be a far safer and happier idea for the many women whose literary ambition far outdoes their ability.

Under the ironical heading of "Munificent," the Wiener Fremdenblatt announces the fact of the Court of Common Council of Vienna having just granted a monthly allowance of five florins (eight shillings) to Josefa Lange, a grandniece of Mozart, living in needy circumstances in the Austrian capital.

"Observe," says Carlyle, "how all passionate language does of itself become musical,—with a finer music than the mere accent; the speech of sorrow—in jealous anger becomes a sort of song—all deep things are

SPONTINI.

It is well known that Schumann had a little "Theatrical Note Book," in which he occasionally jotted down a few comments on operas he happened to hear. An entry on July 27, 1848, relates to Spontini's "Ferdinand Cortez." It is brief but pithy: "Heard this opera for the first time. Delighted with it."

Dr. Naumann says that "no other composer has succeeded in infusing into music the spirit of heroism and glory which prompted the victorious exploits of Napoleon, in portrayal of which Spontini created a kind of artistic expression, the influence of which has extended to the present day."

When Spontini first came to Paris he encountered much opposition, but the Empress Josephine appointed him court composer, and the Emperor also soon became his friend, giving him $2,000 from his private purse for the opera "La Vestale," in addition to the ten thousand francs which the Conservatoire gave every ten years as a prize to the composer of the best opera of the decade.

It was at Napoleon's request that Spontini composed his second grand opera, "Ferdinand Cortez." The total failure of his Spanish campaign caused Napoleon, however, to take such a violent dislike to the subject of the opera, that he prevented its production by a special decree. Subsequently, however, it was given with enormous success.

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONIALS.

ADELINA PATTI.

During my artistic career in the art centres of the world, I have used the pianos of nearly all celebrated manufacturers, but none of them can be compared to yours—none possess to such a marvelous degree that sympathetic, poetic and singing tone quality which distinguishes the Steinway as peerless among them all.

RICHARD WAGNER.

Sounds of such beauty as those coming from my Steinway Grand, flatter and coax the most agreeable tone-pictures from my harmonic melodic senses.

In a word, "I find your Grand Piano of wondrous beauty. It is a noble work of art."

FRANZ LISZT.

The magnificent Steinway Grand piano now stands in my music room, and presents a harmonic totality of admirable qualities, a detailed enumeration of which is the more superfluous, as the instrument fully justifies its world-wide reputation.

ANTON RUBINSTEIN.

Your unrivalled piano-fortes have done full justice to their world-wide reputation, both for excellence and capacity of enduring the severest trials. For, during all my long and difficult journeys all over America in a very inclement season, I used and have been enabled to use your pianos exclusively in my two hundred and fifteen concerts, and also in private, with the most eminent satisfaction and effect.

THEODORE THOMAS.

I consider the Steinway piano the best piano at present made, and that is the reason why I use it in private and also in all my public concerts. As long as the pianos of Messrs. Steinway & Sons retain that high degree of excellence of manufacture, and those admirable qualities which have always distinguished them, I shall continue to use them in preference to all other pianos.

FELICIEN DAVID.

In my idea they are superior to all I have heard or tried to the present day, and in giving you this certificate I not only fulfill a duty of conscience, but at the same time render justice to the man and manufacturer who has realized in his productions the greatest progress in the art of piano-making.

ADOLPHE HENSELT.

It is with the greatest pleasure that I have just played upon your pianos, and cannot refrain from expressing to you in writing my admiration, and how much I was satisfied with them.

MARMONTEL.

The International and French Jury, in placing them first on the list, brilliantly confirm the lively and deep impression which these excellent pianos have produced on me.

ANNETTE ESSIPOFF.

No other European or American pianos known to me possess such extraordinary durability under the severest usage, nor combine all excellences to such a high degree as yours, and in them I have found my ideal instrument.

ETELKA GERSTER.

I regard the Steinway as the beau ideal of all pianos, and with their essentially noble and poetic tone quality, these instruments are wonderfully sympathetic to me. I admire the easy, elastic and agreeable touch, the evenness, richness and surprising duration of tone, blending so effectively with and supporting the human voice, and all these qualities render, in my opinion, the Steinway piano the most desirable instrument of all—certainly the best to accompany the voice.

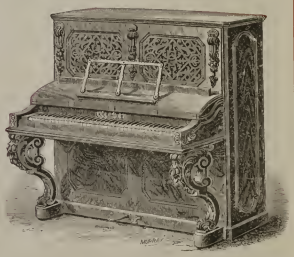
PIANOS.



THE WEBER PIANO is constructed from the musician's standpoint, as well as that of the mechanic: hence these instruments are distinguished from all others by that pure and sympathetic quality of tone that contains the greatest musical possibilities; that consummation of mechanical excellence that admits of the most delicate and impressive effects, while insuring the durability of the instrument, and that uniform superiority that enhances the pleasure of both performer and listener. Constructed from the very best materials and employing only the most skillful workmanship, these instruments combine the highest achievements in the art of piano making, and are comprehensively the best now made, and because of their great durability, power and sweetness of tone, they are the choice of the leading artists and the favorites of the concert room.

The Plot of "Die Walküre."

Brunnhilde, the heroine of this opera, is a daughter of Wotan, the supreme god of Northern mythology. She is one of the nine "Walkuren" or Valkyries, whose duty it is to convey human heroes slain in battle to Walhalla, the abode of the gods.

Act I. Agitated orchestral prelude depicts growling of thunder, and rain beating on Hunding's hut. Into this rude cabin enters Siegmund, son of Wotan by a mortal woman, and sinks down exhausted. Having lost his sword in combat, he flies from his enemies, and unwittingly seeks shelter in the home of their ally. Hunding's wife, Sieglinde, enters and gives the tired guest refreshments. Hunding returns, sternly asks his guest's name, recognizes him as his enemy, and challenges him to mortal combat next day, but offers him hospitality for the night. Sieglinde, irresistibly fascinated by the stranger, puts a sleeping potion into her husband's cup, and joins Siegmund, who soon discovers she is his twin sister, and at the same time his love. She had been captured in battle and married against her will to Hunding. She shows Siegmund the magic sword, Nothung, plunged by Wotan, on her wedding day, into a large tree. Siegmund triumphantly pulls it out, and the lovers escape.

Act II. Wotan meets the wild Valkyrie, Brunnhilde, and bids her preside over a duel between the sons of Siegmund, and give victory to latter. Fricka, Wotan's jealous wife, demands the death of the guilty Siegmund, and Wotan sadly revokes the order just given to Brunnhilde. She protests, but he threatens her with his wrath. Amid wonderful agitated music, Siegmund and Sieglinde appear, pursued by Hunding, whose horn is heard. Brunnhilde comes and tells Siegmund he must die and go to Walhalla. He refuses to be parted from his love, and Brunnhilde, moved by pity, promises to protect him, despite Wotan's orders. Dazed on the rocks, Brunnhilde protects Siegmund, but in vain. Wotan appears and shatters magic sword.

Act III. Ride of the wild Valkyries. Brunnhilde joins them, pursued by Wotan. They piteously implore him to forgive her but in vain. For her disobedience she is condemned to be put into a magnetic sleep, until a hero shall come to wake her and claim her as his wife, a goddess no longer. Wotan's sad farewell. Magic fire encircles the rock to protect her.

RICHARD WAGNER'S ROMANTIC OPERA,
"LOHENGRIN."

The Wagner Society of Bologna has been stirring up the authorities to give a model performance of "Tristan" at the musical exhibition next year; in the meantime a list has been made of some Old-World operas, headed by Lully's "Armide," which is to be mounted with special taste and historical accuracy and chosen for the first day's performance. Then come Gluck's "Orpheus," Picni's "Dido," Cherubini's "Lodoiska," Mehul's "Joseph," Spontini's "Ferdinand Cortez," Pergolesi's "La Servante Maitresse," and Paisiello's "Nina."

Some time ago a Russian Prince, in celebrating his marriage, gave a free operatic performance for the benefit of the peasants. An old woman who had never been in an opera house before, listened attentively to the solos, but when the chorus came in she remarked to her neighbor: "There! that's just what we might have expected! We did not pay for our places, and now they revenge themselves by singing all at once, so as to get through sooner."

"Music belongs to no country," says Weber, "and we value beautiful music from whatever part of the globe it may come."

A SCHEFFEL ANECDOTE.

The Weser Zeitung, one of the leading German papers, states on the best authority that no fewer than half a million copies have been sold of Scheffel's works, the most popular of which is the romantic story, "The Trumpeter of Sackingen," on which the libretto of Nessler's opera is based; and that a publishing house in Stuttgart has a fast press on which nothing is printed but Scheffel's works. Scheffel is especially the idol of German students, on account of his popular student songs. He was to be the hero of the celebration, at Heidelberg, of the five hundredth birthday of the university, when death suddenly carried him off. Although Scheffel was fond of a glass of wine, he was temperate in his habits; but his glowing poetic effusions to Bacchus naturally fostered a different belief. One day an old woman asked him naively: "Is it true that you drink so much?" Whereupon Scheffel replied, "Quite so. And you ought to see the brute eat!"

RUBY ROYAL "SEC" of Henri Abelé Reims (the only red champagne in America), is an exquisite dry wine of exceptional merit. It can be had at all first-class hotels, restaurants and saloons.

SIEGFRIED'S SWORD.

BALLADE BY UHLAND.

ENGLISH WORDS BY M. BYER.

Young Siegfried was a daring lad,
Roamed thro' his father's castle glad,
Yet rests he not within its walls
To wander forth the wide world calls.

He met with many a champion bold,
Whose sword and shield shone bright with gold;
Siegfried had but a homely stave.
Fit only for a wretched knave.

He went into a forest dark,
Where Vulcan plied his fiery work;
There iron strong and steel he found,
And fires that shot their flames around.

"Oh, master, my loved master dear,
Teach me thy skill and science clear,
That my own strength shall forge for me
A sword as good as brand can be."

Siegfried the hammer swung around,
He struck the anvil in the ground;
He struck, and wide the forest rang,
The iron into fragments sprang.

Then from a broken piece he made
So broad and long his own good blade.
"Now have I forged I my trusty brand,
As good as champion of the land,
And as the boldest shall I wield
My sword thro' fight and battle-field."

WOMEN OF THE WEST.

Joaquin Miller says there is a touch of solemnity in the face and character of California women, absent from all other women of this earth. Notwithstanding the large infusion of Spanish and other dark blood, he asserts that the California woman generally has golden hair. He also notes her early development. He was called upon to address the young ladies of Mills' Seminary—the Vassar of the West—and before he had been five minutes on the stand he found he was "speaking to women—women in body and mind." He admits there are many beautiful women in New York and London, and expresses his unbounded admiration for Mrs. Langtry; yet, he adds, that he can find in California twenty Langtrys any day. California women, he says, are the best dressed he ever saw. He especially commends them for disliking "that beastly abomination unto the Lord—the bustle," and for their fondness, on the other hand, of color in their dresses. This, he says, "would reach sombre Philadelphia and sedate Boston too soon."

BEETHOVEN'S BIOGRAPHER.

The famous biographer of Beethoven, Mr. A. W. Thayer, celebrated his seventieth birthday on October 22d. Although he is an American, he has written a more complete biography of Beethoven than any German; and the painstaking erudition shown in his work would do honor to any German professor. He has devoted forty years of his life, and almost his whole fortune, to his great task, and he is still at work on his fourth and last volume. The fact that this biography, although it is considered as the standard authority by every musician, had to be translated into German before a publisher could be found, does not speak well for the enterprise of English and American publishers.

GOLDMARK IN GERMANY.

A Dresden correspondent writes to the London Musical Times: "About four and twenty years ago, a Saxon Count, whose sensibility would be shocked were he ever to read his name in print, appealed to Rubenstein on behalf of a young Jew, needy, but highly gifted, and earning a scanty living by copying music. The result was that, through the generosity of the composer, the struggling genius was enabled to develop his latent powers, and finally to produce two lyrical works which never fail to draw a closely packed audience in more than one large German town, especially in those of Saxony. The young man's name was Carl Goldmark. It would be too exacting to call upon a writer of modern opera to ignore all the improvements of a powerful predecessor for the mere purpose of avoiding a charge of plagiarism; and Goldmark requires the full benefit of this license; for no doubt his light, around which the Dresdeners so love to hover, is to a great extent a borrowed one and his admirers are paying an unconscious tribute to the hero of Bayreuth when they crowd to hear "The Queen of Sheba" and "Merlin." but there is a sufficient residuum of power and originality to make those works a feature of the day. Fräulein Malten, in the part of Viviana, shows a voice unimpaired by the stern ordeal to which for nearly twelve years she has been subjected as the leading exponent of the Wagner school. Whether the womanly Elsa, the stately Queen of Sheba, or the ingénue in the "Meistersinger," she is equally at home; nothing can be fresher than her maidenly confusion on receiving a bouquet from Walther in the last mentioned work. Her ignorance of the world in general, and men in particular, seems actually to increase with her years; one can hardly imagine what her artlessness will be at the age of sixty."

The voice comes from the soul, it has been said. That is perhaps the reason of its complete disappearance from a world where everybody leaves only dust. The voice is the incarnation of the soul, its evident sensual manifestation. Why should not the voice be as sure an indication of the speaking being as the bumps on the skull or the lines of his hands? It denotes the type as clearly as the species; it betrays the instincts and the thoughts; it gives the tone of the soul. There is a whole science there dormant for Desbarolles, and I am astonished that he does not take it up. Besides, in following it up he would make discoveries that no one thinks about, and would give, in exactly those uninvented words, that lexicon that you are asking for, by means of which we should be able to snatch from the night of time the memory of fine human voices and dispute their immortality, just as has been done for the bodies, the faces, the attitudes, and the gestures of celebrated women and heroes.—Théophile Gautier.

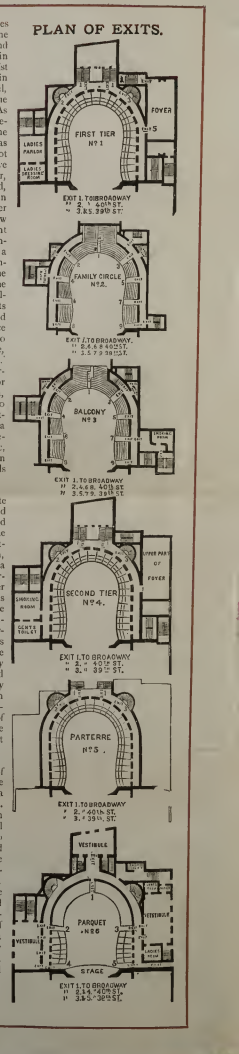
RUBY ROYAL "SEC" (red champagne) was served for the first time in America at the banquet given by Mr. A. W. Nickerson to Mrs Grover Cleveland

A writer in the Paris Figaro relates the following stories regarding the way in which certain musical and dramatic agencies are conducted in France: "On one occasion an artist was sent to fulfill an engagement in full expectation that he would fail, come back, and be good at the 'office' for another commission. As a matter of fact he succeeded, whereupon the agent telegraphed to the manager: 'I hear that —— has pleased the public. He must not succeed. Make arrangements to have him hissed next time.' The director, in fear of the powerful office, obeyed, and the singer was soon back in Paris, and on the books for another opening. A second story tells how two vocalists and a violinist were sent into Normandy to appear at a concert. The affair being in aid of a charity, they were asked, and consented to go for a nominal sum, the singers receiving a hundred francs, the violinist only fifty. A banquet followed the concert, and during its course the artists were complimented upon their disinterestedness. At once the Mayor intervened. 'There is no question of disinterestedness,' said he, 'when one receives 500 francs.' Imagine the astonishment of the performers as, on leaving, the Mayor paid each of the singers that sum, giving the violinist 300, according to the arrangement made with the cheating agent, whose anticipation of a good haul was thus hopelessly defeated. According to M. Massiac, the whole system of French agency in matters musical and dramatic needs reform."

The personal effects of the late Jacques Offenbach, the celebrated composer of opera-bouffe, were placed under the hammer last month at the Hôtel Drouot, of Paris. The sale attracted no very particular attention, and the prices realized furnished a striking proof of the ephemeral character of the popularity of a composer who was the idol of the Parisians under the Second Empire. Thus the gold mounted wand with which Offenbach led the orchestra at the first performance of "Orphée aux Enfers" was knocked down for 260 francs. The violoncello, on which he used to play when he first arrived in Paris, fetched 515 francs. His bust, in marble, by Terrier, was sold for 800 francs. Even the laurel crown in silver gilt, presented to Offenbach by the artists of the Gaieté Theatre, was put up to the highest bidder, who had to pay for it only 290 francs.

A very funny story is told by one of the most pleasing Marguerite's of the day concerning her experience with a diffident Faust in Gounod's opera. She had done her best to make him assume an affectionate attitude, and finally, in his desperate attempt to comply with her demands, he clutched her about the waist and hung to the ends of the false braids which depended from her wig in sheer desperation. Her feelings beggar description as she felt her wig taking leave of her head just as she poured forth her most passionate love measures in the arms of her Faust. Taking advantage of a rest, she said: "Just let alone of my wig, or I'll settle you when I get a chance," and with the relief incidental to the reassurance gained by her release, she finished the great duet and saved her head covering.

PLAN OF EXITS.



WAGNER AS A POET.

There is one point upon which critics of Wagner cannot avoid agreement, if they are true to their convictions. Whatever variety of opinions may be held as to the worth of his musical theories or the beauty of his compositions, no one can truthfully deny that he was a poet. He was not a creator in the sense that Dante and Homer were; but he was indeed what the Greeks called "poietes"—a maker. He was willing to accept material of the best kind, wherever he found it, and having obtained it, he proceeded to make the best possible use of it. It was natural that he should have turned to the marvelous stories contained in the old Scandinavian literature. There is no greater poetry in existense. The rugged grandeur of these antique songs is unfortunately not familiar to Americans. It cannot be preserved in a translation. The tremendous character of the myths themselves is not easily appreciable. But a very brief and cursory glance at the material contained in these poems is sufficient to convince us that the imagination of Scandinavian mythology was far less trammeled in the dark ages than in this nineteenth century of human progress and restrictive culture.

Samund the Wise, a Christian priest of Iceland, in the latter part of the eleventh century, collected and committed to writing the oral traditions of Scandinavian mythology. His collection, termed the Edda, consists of thirty-eight poems, and is divided into two parts. The first, or mythological cycle, contains everything relating to the Scandinavian ideas of the gods, creation, and the origin of man. The second, or heroic cycle, contains the original materials of the Nibelungen Lied of the German minnesingers, which is the source of Wagner's tetralogy. The story of Sigurd and Brynhilda is the chief feature of these poems, which are immensely superior in power and beauty to the German songs founded on them. Their language is uncouth yet strong, like Carlyle's prose, and their spirit is colossal. The passion and tenderness of heroic souls are painted with marvelous intensity, and noble thoughts and deeds mingle with foul crimes and stupendous tragedies.

The story of "Siegfried," pruned, polished, and emasculated to suit the sensitive taste of a more artificial civilization than that to which the Eddaic poems were familiar, is known to English speaking people in the form of the tale of the sleeping beauty. This fairy story charmed most of us in our childhood, and in our later days it has been served up to us, touched, as M. Taine expresses it, with the "amiable dilletantism" of Tennyson, in his little poem, "The Day Dream." This is a harmless and pretty version of the old story; but placed beside the original, it becomes a literary reductio ad absurdum.

Wagner's dramatic version of the tale retains all that is good in the original. It is a failing of the most enthusiastic partisans of Wagner to claim more for him than is justly his due, and they do this when they assert that the deep significance of this music-drama is wholly his. But the overthrow of the gods was a part of the Norse mythology. Ragnarök—the Götterdämerung—the twilight of the gods, is foretold in the Edda, and the advent of one greater than the gods is predicted. The abdication of Wotan and the preparation for the incidents of the last of the Nibelung music-dramas is founded on the original material from which Wagner constructed his works. His dramas however, are so nobly made, his poetry is so full of the true fire of passion, that his fame as a literary producer must assume an equal footing with his glory as a musician.

It was in accordance with a profound conviction that Wagner made use of Titanic myths as the personages of his dramas. Yet he reaches his highest poetry when he becomes most human. It is the intense humanity of Siegfried, his pure and guileless soul, his buoyant youth, his overwhelming impulses, and his sudden burst of love, that endear him to us. And as for Brunhilde, she is all woman; of heroic mould and soul, it is true; but none the less, a sweet and loving spirit. These two beings are noble types of humanity, equipped with the untouched beauty of normal physical proportions and endowed with the grandeur of unrestricted elemental passions. Among the semi-supernatural dwarfs and giants, and the uncanthly figures of gods and goddesses, these two beings stand forth with the simplicity and sublimity of Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden; and the union of their spirits in the final scene of the drama is a masterly and faultlessly poetic exposition of the force and dignity of unrestrained human love. This scene, reached by a series of events which point to it with a logical coherence unsurpassed in any existing drama, is a climax which stamps Wagner as a poet.

W. J. HENDERSON.

Collier, in his Essay on Music, makes this curious suggestion: "I believe it is possible to invent an instrument that shall have quite a contrary effect to those martial ones now in use; an instrument that shall sink the spirits, and shake the nerves, and curdle the blood, and inspire despair, and cowardice, and consternation, at a surprising rate. It is probable the roaring of lions, the warbling of cats and screech owls, together with a mixture of the howling of dogs, judiciously imitated and compounded, might go a great way in this invention. Whether such anti-music as this might not be of service in a camp, I shall leave to the military men to consider.

Under the ironical heading of "Munificent," the Wiener Fremdenblatt announces the fact of the Court of Common Council of Vienna having just granted a monthly allowance of five florins (eight shillings) to Josefa Lange, a grandniece of Mozart, living in needy circumstances in the Austrian capital.

An interesting question once arose as to what manner of life contributed most to longevity. A list of ten men in each of these departments was prepared, and the average length of life compared. Men of science, men of art, men of action. The average length of life among scientific men was 69½ years; among men of artistic temperament, 64¾ years; and among men of motion, 61 years. The oldest of each list were Fontenelle, Titian and Dandalo, while not far behind were such names as Humboldt, Bossuet, Newton, Herschel, Frankl in, Plato, Kant, Galileo Arcelo, Voltaire, Goethe, Hans Lachs, Wellington, Jefferson, Augustus, Frederic the Great and Charlemagne. The three youngest celebrities were Bichat, Keats and the Emperor Otho II., followed by Pascal, Spinoza, Chopin, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Byron, Burns, Raphael, Coreggio, Van Dyke, Goldsmith, Spenser, Alexander the Great and Gustavus Adolphus.

Gounod received six thousand francs for his "Faust" when he offered it to his publisher in 1857. This was not a bad price, generally speaking; but Faust happened to be a winning number in the lottery, and the publisher, Choudeau, had in ten years cleared $200,00o by his bargain

The Wagner performances at Bayreuth next year are fixed to take place from the 22d of July to the 18th of August. Parsifal will be given on Sundays and Wednesdays, and the Meistersinger on Mondays and Thursdays.

A true youthful prodigy is now appearing at the Theatre Mezzano in Milan. This is Anita Mazzoli, a girl of nine years of age, who acts in three languages, Italian, French, and English, plays the piano and guitar admirably, and sings charmingly.

Anton Rubinstein's new symphony in A minor has been performed for the first time at Dresden under the conductorship of Herr Stahl, and has given the greatest satisfaction, so beautifully it was given.

"What would civilization be without the piano?" [Oliver Wendell Holmes.]

Hardman, Peck & Co., Manufacturers of the great Hardman Piano, are displaying in their new Building on Fifth Avenue an elegant variety of their famous Grand and Upright Pianos; for the holiday trade. They also offer to the public, besides their own immense stock, Five Hundred Excellent Upright Pianos, consigned to them by a Manufacturer who has been compelled to suspend business. Wishing to dispose of these pianos at once, we will sell them at cost of production. New Warerooms: 138 Fifth Avenue, between 18th and 19th Sts.

A Marked Compliment to American Druggists. Mme. Sara Bernhardt has just ordered from Caswell, Massey & Co., the well known Druggists of New York and Newport, to be forwarded to her Paris address by express, immediately, thirty cases of Massey's Kide Flower and Cucumber cream. When it is remembered how many fine preparations for the whitening and softening of the skin are made by the Chemists and Perfumers of Paris, his order must be considered a valuable testimony to the high quality of this popular Cream.

THE "Dog's Head" brand of Ale and Stout well deserves its popularity.

M. Samt Saens, the eminent French composer and critic, calls "Siegfried" the most original part of Wagner's Tetralogy: "Not only is this no longer opera (in the old sense of the word)," he says, "it is no longer the theatre. The spectator is transported to an entirely new world, which must alone make possible. It it impossible to give the faintest idea of such music: it resembles no other. The music triples the intensity of the feelings with which the characters are animated—that is all one can say to those who have not heard it."

The Paris municipality have again, as in previous years, offered a prize of 1,500 francs for the best choral and orchestral work, which is to be eventually performed in, and at the expense of, that town.

Extract from the Boston Evening Gazette August 6 by "Mr. Clapp of reader courses, given by Mr. [illegible] Wednesday, at his summer residence in Medford, in honor of Mrs. Cleveland, was a brilliant affair. It was served and served well, the supervision of the whole being done by Mrs. [illegible] and it could not have been fairer in any respect had Mr. Mackenzie had a hundred thousand dollars to spend. He did give Mr. Bickman a free hand in the matter, and the result was that only now, the arrangement of the table was [illegible] and decorations were simply superb, and "the Ruby" champagne of which Bickman & Fordham are proprietors of the Parker House, have the only box in the country—was the only champagne served."

The champagne referred to in the above extract from the Boston "Evening Gazette" is of a rich crimson or "ruby" color and bears the brand: "Ruby Royal" Reserve, Wine Pronounced Non Plus Ultra. It is a wine of exceptional merit in all the characteristics of body, mellowness of flavor, and delicacy of bouquet. It is imported in Monsieur Abele writes: "I can use this as my [illegible] wine. I can supply the same quality, but never any better; for it is indeed the choicest product of the Champagne country." It was selected on the occasion of the entertainment given by Mr. A. W. Nickerson to "the first lady of the land" which it was served for the first time in America. The "Ruby Royal" was highly appreciated by all present at the feast, and is destined to become the wine of the elite.

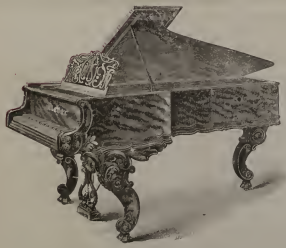
PIANOS.



THE WEBER PIANO is constructed from the musician's standpoint, as well as that of the mechanic; hence these instruments are distinguished from all others by that pure and sympathetic quality of tone that contains the greatest musical possibilities; that consummation of mechanical excellence that admits of the most delicate and impressive effects, while insuring the durability of the instrument, and that uniform superiority that enhances the pleasure of both performer and listener. Constructed from the very best materials and employing only the most skillful workmanship, these instruments combine the highest achievements in the art of piano making, and are comprehensively the best now made, and because of their great durability, power and sweetness of tone, they are the choice of the leading artists and the favorites of the concert room.

London Criticism on Herr Elmblad.

HERR ELMBLAD is unquestionably a great singer. He possesses a bass voice of remarkable power, range and quality and he can use it with wonderful effect, having evidently been schooled by great teachers. He is also a gifted musician. His capacity of facial expression is hardly less remarkable than his vocal powers, and he possesses, at dramatic ability.—Daily Telegraph.

HERR ELMBLAD'S voice is remarkable for its power, its firmness and its fine, rich quality.—Standard.

A very large audience was attracted last evening to the St. James hall to listen to a concert given by Herr Elmblad, a young Swede, not unknown to the musical world of London. Herr Elmblad has a voice of extraordinary power and range. His rendering of Schumann's "Die beiden Grenadiere" and "Die beiden Grenadiere"—the former requiring tenderness and softness, the latter trumpet-like force—were spontaneously encored, and the critics pronounce him to be a rising star of the first order.—Times.

DICKENS has the reputation of being the most successful alchemist, because he extracted gold from a Copperfield. Speaking of Dickens, calls to mind that his characters were once counted, and the result was above 1500! Many of them are "typical masterpeces of English humor.

THE "Dog's Head" brand of Ale and Stout well deserves its popularity.

AN ARISTOCRATIC ART.

"Opera, whatever its merits and defects, is essentially a royal and an aristocratic entertainment. The drama was started by Thespis in a cart. The opera, on the other hand, was founded by popes, cardinals, and kings. The first operatic libretto, that of Poliziano's "Orfeo," was the work of Cardinal Riareo, nephew of Sixtus IV. Pope Clement IX. was the author of no less than seven libretti. The popes, indeed, used in former days to keep up an excellent theatre."—H. S. Edwards.

CHINESE SINGING.

The Chinese have in their classification of eight musical sounds utterly omitted to make any mention of the sound of the human voice. In all their great ceremonies, such as hymns of praise to heaven, and commemoration of the ancestors, songs are used, but never on these occasions are female voices allowed.

A slave is far more marketable with musical talents than without. It is seldom, however, that women assist in any concerts whatever; the instrumental playing as well as the singing being almost alway wholly rendered by men.

Few travelers have heard a musical Chinese lady sing, and those who have enjoyed this rare event, say it is the most torturing of all Chinese music; from the nose and throat issue the most droning and hideous sounds and they seem to pile Ossa upon Pelion in the way of unnatural tones.

The natural voice of the Chinese is rather high; and very high tenors are not at all rare in the empire.

The voice in China is trained to much flexibility by the exigencies of the language, for the Chinese is, in one sense, the most musical of languages, as a word acquires half a dozen different significations according to the pitch of voice, or inflection with which it is pronounced.

The number of different words in the whole Chinese tongue does not exceed three hundred and fifty; all the additional ones are simply variations of these by lowering or raising the voice. This leads the foreigner into endless complications and misunderstandings; for example, the word tchu, pronounced clearly with the vowel of medium length, means "master, but by extending the vowel a trifle it signifies "hog"; it alsomeans "column" and "cookery."—Elton's Curiosities of Music.

This is a story from Ceylon literature.

A king had a beautiful daughter whose one detect was that she could not be made to speak. Every means in his own power and that of the magicians failing—he offered her as a bride to any one who could make her talk. One day a handsome young prince appeared and was admitted. He possessed the singular gift of making inanimate objects converse. Before entering the princess' receptionroom he stopped in the hall and thus addressed the lamp: "O Lamp! there was once a company of travelers met together at an inn. One was a carpenter, the next a painter, the third a cloth merchant, and the last a jeweler. The carpenter with his tools cut out of the floor a figure of a woman so beautiful that the painter could not resist—and he gave her the very colors of life—then the merchant covered her with his nicest stuffs, and, finally, the jeweler decorated her with his rarest jewels. Then came a hot discussion. To whom did she belong? They grew angrier and angrier. Now, O Lamp, which one was the rightful owner?" The lamp said one and then another, but the prince contradicted him every time, until their discussion was as furious as that of the four original disputants. The princess could stand it no longer—she must speak or explode. "You fools," she burst out "none of them owned her. She belonged to the inn-keeper, for wasn't she made out of his wood?" So the prince won her, and was never heard to complain of her silence, or even brevity.

This is an Englishman's idea of women: "A Frenchwoman will love her husband if he is witty or chivalrous; a German woman if he is constant and faithful; a Dutchwoman if he does not disturb her ease and comfort too much; a Spanish woman if he wreaks his vengeance on those who incur his displeasure; an Italian woman if he is dreamy and poetical; a Danish woman if he thinks her country the brightest and happiest on earth; a Russian woman if he despises all Westerners as miserable barbarians; an Englishwoman if he succeeds in ingratiating himself with the court and aristocracy: an American woman if he has plenty of money.

"When I am in a crowded car and a lady comes in, I think it is the duty of some man to get up and give her his seat. I look around in the car to see if any man looks as if he were making a move in that direction, and when I see them all keep their seats, I hide my face behind my newspaper and blush for my sex."

SUBJECTIVE AND DREAM MUSIC.

Some people fancy that Italian melodies are superior to German melodies because it is easier to remember and whistle them. But this is a very superficial test. A trained musical ear finds it just as easy to remember a Schubert song as a Bellini aria, and the Schubert song has the advantage of being harmonically as interesting as it is melodically, which is not the case with Bellini's music, which has disappeared from the stage because modern musicians crave more harmonic variety than he offers.

Did you ever try to recall, not only the melody but also the harmony and the instrumental colors of a piece of music—say the introduction to "Lohengrin!" There can be no doubt that Wagner, in his solitary study, could hear the music he wrote as perfectly as if an orchestra had been playing it to him; for only thus was he able in each case to choose those combinations of instruments which exactly corresponded to the mood he tried to express.

Many amateurs also have the power of recalling a complicated orchestral or vocal composition as distinctly as they an recall the sight of a landscape, with its green trees, blue sky, etc. The power of doing so can be acquired by practice, and a most delightful accomplishment it is when once mastered. For then one can enjoy operatic or concert selections whenever one pleases, and they are never marred by bad singing or slovenly playing.

This subjective music, as it might be called, has a charm even more exquisite than music actually heard. Those who have ever had the pleasure of dreaming of music, will be partially able to realize this truth; and everybody has heard the story of the famous Italian violinist who dreamed of hearing a sonata which he remembered and wrote down, and which proved to be his best composition. It is one of the most poetic touches in Wagner's "Meistersinger" that Walter dreams the song with which he wins the prize

Shakespeare's insight into the function of music ranks him above all other poets. He knows that music "charmeth sleep," "killing care and grief of heart"; it "hath helped madmen to their wits," and "will make wise men mad." "I never heard so musical a discord, such sweet thunder," might be used as a text for a chapter on modern dramatic music.

At the third and last Concert and Public Rehearsal of this season of the Oratorio Society, which will take place on Wednesday afternoon and Thursday evening, March 2d and 3d, Franz Liszt's Sacred Oratorio "Christus" will be given for the first time in this country. The Chorus of the Oratorio Society, numbering 300 voices, will be assisted by the Orchestra of the Symphony Society and the following soloists: Frau Herbert-Foerster, Soprano; Miss Hattie Clapper, Contralto; Herr Max Alvary, Tenor; Mr. Max Heinrich, Baritone, and Mr. Frank Sealy Organist. The sale of tickets will commence on Thursday morning, Feb. 24, at the Metropolitan Opera House.

An adjective and its derivative adverb are often wide apart in application. For instance, the old illustration of the difference between a man constant in love, and a man constantly in love.

TO BE BEAUTIFUL YOU MUST HAVE PEARLY-WHITE TEETH. Adams' Tutti Frutti Chewing Gum beautifies the teeth and preserves them.

Handwriting may often be a safe index to character yet as a rule, it cannot hold good. Byron's hand was a school-boy scrawl, Macaulay's an ungraceful sprawl, Keats was clerky, Scott's utterly disappointing, Emerson wrote in sprawling and illegible characters. Fenimore Cooper and Dickens wrote in a notoriously bad style, while the Ettrick Shepherd's was called "vile." Horace Greeley's was unreadable to all but one compositor who had made it a specialty, and Napoleon's letters to Josephine were mistaken for maps of war operations. On the other hand, Wellington's writing was clear and noble Washington's firm and dignified, Cromwell's bold and steady, Henry VIII's determined, and Franklin's large and bold. Of literary men—that of Gray's was neat and regular, Leigh Hunt's graceful, Moore's easy, Shakespeare's as remarkable as his poetry, Poe's strikingly beautiful, Tennyson's classic, Longfellow's vigorous and poetic looking; Holmes's graceful and quaint, Landor's bold and vigorous, Pitt's writing was flowing, Gladstone's is neat and regular, Lord Palmerston was a model of penmanship, and Chief-Justice Chase was celebrated for the beauty of his writing. Landor, in his "Imaginary Conversations," makes Aspasia say: "Men may be negligent of their hand-writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life; but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly."

One of the features of the fashionable dinners this season is the new dry wine ("Grand Vin Sec") of Louis Roederer. It is also the proper thing to serve it at the swell weddings.

Early in this century, an Edinborough manager, bringing out "King Lear," hit upon a greatly improved device for making "stage-thunder." He laid a "corduroy" road of parallel timbers across the stage behind the scene, and over these the carpenter was instructed to trundle a wheel-barrow full of nine-pound cannon-balls. The experiment worked with beautiful success, but unfortunately, just as Lear before the scene had worked up to his climax, the carpenter tripped a timber and away went the thunder, following the declivity of the stage towards the front. The scene was powerless to oppose its progress, and quickly went down before the resistless fury of the storm, which next swept on towards the infirm old King in spring him with an agility as graceful as it was sudden. Even the dignity of the musicians gave way, and they vaulted with their instruments into the parquet with various degrees of nimbleness, to the accompaniment of crashing glass chimneys and thumping cannon-balls. And in the midst of all this confusion and devastation the author of all the trouble lay prone upon the back of the stage—frightened completely out of the ability to rise.

Parties wishing to secure choice of advertising space in the Saratoga Daily Register for the coming season will please address the publisher, J. T. COWDERY, 21 Barclay St. The Register has been published ten years and enjoys the patronage of the most select class of advertisers.

A Fragment.

"MASANIELLO."

ACT I.—An insurrection of Neapolitan sailors and fishermen against their Spanish rulers, about the middle of the seventeenth century, forms the historical basis of the opera. The hero is the fisherman Masaniello, whose dumb sister, Fenella, has been betrayed by an unknown cavalier and subsequently dragged to prison by soldiers. The first scene is in the garden of the Spanish Viceroy, whose son Alfonso is celebrating his marriage with Elvira. Fenella, having escaped from prison, is pursued by the soldiers, but throws herself at the feet of Elvira, interrupting the nuptial processions. From the soldiers Elvira discovers that the Viceroy himself had imprisoned Fenella; and the dumb girl tells the story of her betrayal and capture in gesture language. Elvira promises her protection to Fenella and then proceeds to the chapel. As the bridal pair come out again Elvira takes her protege to introduce her to Alfonso, who also discovers through his countenance, and the confession of Fenella, that he is the betrayer of the dumb girl.

ACT II.—A fisherman's camp at Portici. Masaniello's friend Pie ro, who has been sent to seek Fenella, returns and reports that he could not find her. But presently Fenella appears and tells her sad story to her brother, in her gesture language. Masaniello and his followers resolve on revenge, and organize a rebellion against the tyranny of the Spanish viceroy.

ACT III. Elvira having pardoned her husband's crime, asks him to send for Fenella and take care of her. His soldiers find her in a Neapolitan market place and carry her off, after Masaniello, who suddenly appears, has thrown a silence with his dagger. The act closes with the famous prayer; and the insurrection begins.

ACT IV.—Masaniello's Hut. Masaniello deplores the horrors of the insurrection when Fenella enters, endeavors to describe some of the scenes she has witnessed and then sinks down exhausted. Pietro appears and demands that Alfonso shall be executed. He has hardly left when Alfonso and Elvira appear as fugitives and appeal to Fenella for protection. She recognizes Alfonso, and her first impulse is to deliver him up to the fishermen; but pity prevails, and, Masaniello appearing, they are assured of their safety. Not withstanding the murmurs of his followers, he sends them in a boat to a castle. The keys of the city are now delivered to Masaniello, as well as the royal insignia. As he mounts his charger and rides away, Pietro and the conspirators vow vengeance on him for having allowed Alfonso to escape.

ACT V.—Pietro makes an attempt to poison Masaniello, who however, recovers and leads the army against the forces of Alfonso which are advancing to recapture the city, while the superstitious populace are terrified by the growlings and eruptions of Vesuvius. Elvira appears before Fenella and tells of an attack made on her by the conspirators, and how she was saved by the intervention of Masaniello. Alfonso now joins them. The populace, he relates, furious at the generous conduct of Masaniello in allowing Elvira to escape once more, assassinated him. Fenella, maddened by this loss, hurries to the background and leaps into the abyss.

Who, when the silent wrinkle steals
On brow and cheek, its ravage heals?
Who but Gouraud?

A young composer once wrote to Rossini, asking his advice as to the best method of composing an overture. Here is a portion of the answer: "Wait till the evening before the first performance, for nothing excites inspiration like necessity, the presence of a copyist waiting for your work, and the view of a manager in despair tearing out his hair by handfuls. In Italy, in my time, all the managers were bald at thirty.

"I composed the Overture to "Othello" in a small room in the Barbaja Palace where the baldest and most ferocious of managers had shut me up by force, with nothing but a dish of macaroni and the threat that I should not leave the place alive, until I had written the last note. I wrote the Overture to "Gazza Ladra" on the day of the first performance, in an upper loft of the Scala where I had been confined by the manager under the guard of four scene-shifters, who had orders to throw my text out of the window bit by bit to the copyists who were waiting below to transcribe it. In default of the music I was to be thrown out. For Barbiere I did better. I composed no Overture but tacked on one intended for a very serious work called Elizabetta. The public were delighted. I composed the Overture to Count Ory, while angling with my feet in the water and in the company of M. Aguado, who was talking Spanish finance all the time. That of "Gillaume Tell" was written under some what similar circumstances," etc. This may be very well for a Rossini, but would be rather a dangerous experiment to recommen das general advice.

No new operas were produced in Italy at the opening of the season, during the Christmas holidays, and it is noteworthy that the operas chosen at the leading houses were those which most strongly lean toward the modern dramatic school. Thus at Milan, "Carmen" was given; at Rome, "Aida;" at Naples, "Mefistofele;" at Palermo, Piacenza, and Vincenza, "Gioconda." "One of the most curious phases of modern music," says a London paper, "is the steady progress of the German school in Italy. This is in part owing to the pronounced preference of Sgambati and Boito for German music, and partly to the German commercial element in the large cities. The 'Deutscher Kunstlerverein' in Rome is now buildin a large concert-room for the better performance of choral and orchestral works."

THE OPERA SEASON.

THREE MORE YEARS OF OPERA IN GERMAN. — THE NEW OPERATIC POLICY. — MR. STANTON.

As was announced some time ago, the Directors of the Metropolitan Opera House have decided to continue the performances of Opera in German for at least three more years. In making this decision they were guided partly by the fact that, by extending the period of engagement over several seasons, more satisfactory arrangements could be made with some artists who are very much in demand abroad; and, still more, by the unmistakable manner in which the public has shown its approval of the policy pursued at this house during this and last season.

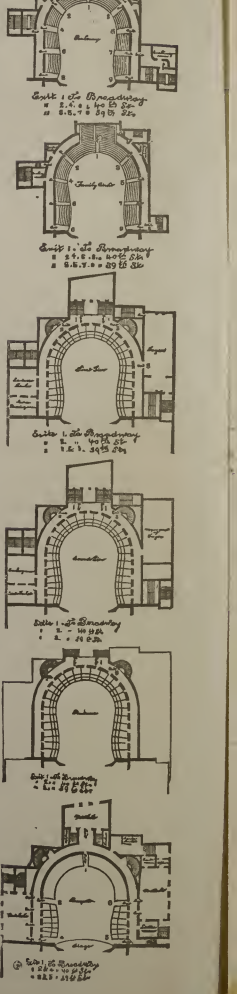
A few years ago it appeared as if the New York public had lost its interest in operatic performances. But it has now been made evident that the reason why opera languished here was simply because it was given in an antiquated style. New York was ten years behind the principal foreign cities, where the style of lyric opera, which requires nothing but one or two great singers, has long since gone out of fashion. The late lamented Dr Damrosch clearly saw how the interest in opera could be revived, and the policy adopted by him has been carried out since, with the gratifying results that are known to all.

In the first place, the Directors feel that they can claim, without fear of contradiction, that at the Metropolitan, for the first time, have the great modern operas been placed on the stage with a scenic splendor equal to that witnessed in Paris and Vienna. Nor has any expense and labor been spared in attempting to bring the orchestra and chorus to the highest standard of perfection; while the artists are of the best that could be secured for their respective parts; and the willingness of the leading artists to occasionally impersonate minor roles—one of the noblest traits of German artists—has greatly contributed to that excellenee of ensemble which opera goers of the present day imperatively demand.

In making up the repertory, the Directors were naturally guided by the unmistakable preferences of the musical public. Last year, almost one-half of the performances given were devoted to three of Wagner's operas; and it was but just, therefore, to give the place of honor this year to the same composer, two more of whose operas have been added to the list. Meyerbeer, Gounod, Goldmark and Bizet are the other composers represented. Several others have been held in reserve, in case of necessity but as the public interest in the nine operas so far produced has not decreased, it has not been deemed necessary to add to the arduous labors of the artists. Few people have any idea how much trouble is involved in placing an opera on the stage in the thorough manner in which it is done at the Metropolitan. Whenever a new opera is brought out, at a foreign opera house, five or six months are consumed in the preparations, whereas at this house, three novelties of the grandest proportions have been produced within little more than two months.

The three novelties of the season have also been the three greatest successes. Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba" has had a run unparalleled in the history of opera in America. Wagner's "Meistersinger," though written in his latest style, has already had seven performances, with ever-increasing audiences and appreciation, while his "Rienzi," though appealing to a different taste, appears to find the same favor.

Next year, possibly two more of Wagner's operas, and several works of other composers will be added to the repertory. Mr. Edmund C. Stanton will go to Europe in April or May to make arrangements with several famous artists for next season. The Board of Directors take this opportunity to call the public attention to the large share of this season's success which is due to the tact and managerial ability of Mr. Stanton. It is no sinecure to be placed at the head of an operatic enterprise of such gigantic proportions as that at the Metropolitan Opera House; but Mr. Stanton, by his justice and impartiality, and his courteous and obliging disposition has succeeded in repressing conflicts, and steering the operatic ship through every storm. The artists and every one connected with the Opera House loves and esteems him and this well deserved popularity has often enabled him to secure concessions that a less popular Director could not obtain. Mr. Stanton has also achieved a great success in the production and rendering of a new opera twelve times to overflowing houses, and also thus far not a single change has been made in the operas announced to be given. Two events unprecedented in the annals of operatic affairs in this country. The artists of the Opera House in order to show their appreciation of Mr. Stanton, have tendered him a complimentary benefit, but Mr. Stanton while highly gratified with this mark of their esteem declines the profferred honor.



"Parsifal" at Bayreuth.

When Wagner gave his first festival at Bayreuth, in 1876, few believed that so costly an experiment could be repeated. The seats for a single performance cost, on this occasion, $18. But the "Parsifal" festival in 1882, was a still greater success. It has been repeated twice, and a third one will be given this summer. It is worthy of notice that, next to Germany, America has always furnished the largest number of visitors, just as it has at the Oberammergau Passion Play. Those who have not attended one of these festivals, may familiarize themselves with the music at the Oratorio Society's concert. The festival this summer will begin on July 23 and end Aug. 20; and, besides "Parsifal," that work of Wagner's which most resembles it—" Tristan and Isolde "—will be sung.

The list of artists who will take part in these performances is unusually fine, including, as it does, almost all the leading Wagnerian singers in Germany. Among the sopranos will be Lilli Lehmann, Materna, Malten, Lucher, Papier, and Kraus; among the tenors, Niemann, Winkelmann, Vogel, Gudehus; among the baritones and basses, Scaria, Reichmann, and Fuchs. The directors will be Hans Richter, Anton Seidl, Levi and Mottl. The prices for seats will be only four or five dollars. The Bayreuth theatre is a curiosity, which alone would repay a visit to this town, which, moreover, is situated in a most romantic part of Bavaria. The mountain view from the Wagner theatre is one of the finest bits of scenery in Germany. Bayreuth is only a few miles from Nuremberg, the scene of Wagner's "Meistersinger," and the most quaint and best preserved mediæval city in Europe.

CUT GLASS.

To clean cut glassware requires a solution. Soap will not answer the purpose, as it will adhere to the delicate cuts and crevices in the glass and also leave a scum over the surface. A most efficient article for this purpose, and used by the manufacturers of cut glassware, is James Pyle's Pearline Washing Compound. It will dissolve in water and thoroughly clean and polish the glass without leaving any substance in the curved work. Ladies would do well to try Pearline for his purpose, but do not accept any injurious imitations, adulterated with gritty matter.—Chester, Pa., Times.

Wagner's "Parsifal."

TO BE GIVEN BY THE ORATORIO SOCIETY AS A DRAMATIC ORATORIO.

Now that Wagner has come to be looked upon here, no less than in his own country, as the greatest and most popular of all operatic composers, it might have been expected that his last work would be produced by the German artists at the Metropolitan Opera House. Unfortunately such a thing cannot be done. For, in accordance with Wagner's wishes, his widow is reserving the right of producing "Parsifal" on the stage exclusively for Bayreuth, no other city having been allowed to give it except Munich, where the King, Wagner's old friend and most liberal patron, was permitted to enjoy a few performances during which, as usual, he excluded all other spectators from the theatre.

The only possible way of hearing "Parsifal," therefore, is either to attend the festival given at Bayreuth almost every summer, or to give it in the concert hall as a dramatic oratorio. This has already been done, with great success in London, where the work was given twice, the first time attracting an audience of 6,000, the second time of 8,000 auditors. New Yorkers, too, have been given an opportunity to listen to a few fragments; but the Oratorio Society will produce for the first time, at its third concert, the whole work, barring such cuts as are necessary to bring it within the limits of a concert performance.

To those who have not heard "Parsifal" at Bayreuth, some few portions will probably appear vague and obscure without the scenery and action. But the drama is so full of beautiful music which speaks for itself, that no one who listens attentively can fail to be delighted with it. Wagner's real "Swan Song" is not the melody with which Lohengrin greets his swan, but the sacred drama "Parsifal." For although it was his swan song, and written when the composer and almost reached his three-score years and ten, it is in character [illegible] a remarkable wealth of ideas and spontaneity of invention.

Even Dr. Hanslick, Wagner's most uncompromising opponent, was forced on hearing "Parsifal" to exclaim regarding Wagner's creative powers: "For a man of Wagner's age (59), and with his system, it seems to me in 'Parsifal' a creation to be astonishing. All [illegible] the wide pieces of the enchanting melodious charm of the flower-girl scene, and of the energy of the festal procession, Parsifal shows control of a power which his youngest contemporaries may envy him."

Our old friend, Time, marches things in "Parsifal" in its delightful orchestration; and these brilliant and varied orchestral tints, as need not be said, can be enjoyed quite as well in the concert hall as in the theatre. Regarding the instrumentation, it was Hanslick again, who said the greatest thing: "Parsifal" is scored in a surprisingly discreet manner. In the art of orchestration, Wagner has not grown old: in Parsifal this art has developed into pure magic, and for every change of mood conjures the most wonderful sounds in infinite shocks and variety."

"Parsifal" will be sung by the Oratorio Society, which has been enlarged this year, and by a special choir of boys. The soloists will be selected from the artists of the Metropolitan Opera House, including Fraulein Brandt, who alternated with Frau Materna in the role of Kundry when "Parsifal" was first produced at Bayreuth, in 1882. By reserving this difficult work for the third concert, the Society will be able to study it all winter, and the directors confidently anticipate that its performance will form a worthy climax of the season.

OPERA SEASON 1885-86.

The season will extend over thirteen weeks, which will include thirty-nine Subscription Nights and thirteen Matinees. Commencing on November 23d, the season will continue until Saturday, March 6th, 1886,

All the artists engaged are the best in Germany; but the Board of Directors desire to state that they do not rely upon the so-called Star-System, but upon the strength of the ensemble, and attention to every detail, to make the coming Season a success.

It may not be amiss to remind the public that Opera here differs from Opera abroad, in that it is supported by subsidy from individuals instead of from Governments, and the Board of Directors count upon the aid of all music lovers to assist the Stockholders in their endeavor to make New York a musical centre.

The following is a clipping from some newspaper which Col. Mapleson sent us with the request that we publish it in our programme

"TIMEO DANAOS."

Some time ago it was insisted upon in these columns that if New York wanted Italian opera New York had no choice but to go to Colonel Mapleson for it. New York, urged thereto principally by the New York newspapers, has persuaded itself that it does not want any Italian opera this season, and is apparently trying to persuade itself that it prefers the rather peculiar concoction which Mrs. Tharber, good old soul! offers in its place.

Singularly enough, at this juncture, while the flouted Colonel is finding abundant consolation in the heart of New York's indifference, comes the news that the operatic needs of London have caused certain other high and mighty people to defer to the irrepressible warrior.

When Papa Gye died some years ago, it was found that Covent Garden was in a hopeless muddle, and the sons were unable to steer the ship; but this house was the to be, alles of fashion, and so the Royal Italian Opera Company, limited, was formed, with Ernest Gye as manager, and a list of directors selected from the most fashionable and richest patrons of the house, among them being one of the Rothschilds, who, however, with the traditional sagacity of his race, smelt failure in the air, and prudently withdrew before the concern was floated.

The scheme, sure enough, turned out badly, and last year directors as such a modest criterion as the success of opera or effects of music" appealing to them no form a guarantee fund of £5,000 ($25,000). Incidentally the directors remarked that they will try and get £10,000, within which they need not count on footing it during the opera season, as they have no commercial grip on losses from "unremunerative" and consequently great deal of money in America.

This is not at all encouraging to any but utterly unreasonable starts will be plentiful for the appearance of the guarantors, and also pleads that "an institution of thirty-five years should not be allowed to go to pieces."

Still we say, however, despite this pathetic appeal, and despite the £5,000 guaranteed and £10,000 to the Royal Italian Opera Company has gone the way of many compromises, and this season Covent Garden will be open as usual, to hear the well-trained but unexciting music-dramas adapted to the tastes of the cultivated Cockneys.

Is there no moral in this? And must Colonel Mapleson, who proposes to open to-day with the same company that gave the Paris Opera comparison

Auber was sometimes surprised at the compliment of his fame. Says a writer in Tonight here: "He was modest itself, and it is rather amusing to compare him to another composer, a contemporary of his. Spontini, who at a dress rehearsal of one of his operas appeared at the desk in grand costume, covered with all the decorations he was entitled to wear. Approaching the desk slowly and majestically, he elevated the baton, fixed his eagle eyes on the full orchestra and chorus, and spoke as follows: 'Gentlemen, the work which we are going to have the honor of performing is a masterpiece. Now then!' Auber seemed to be always preparing for a rainy day. He perpetually noted down motives: then, when he had an opera to write, he took his sketch books and there chose among the thousands of notes, what he wanted. He used to say that the difficulty for him was not to get inspiration but to know how properly to appreciate, how to use them."

Mme. Sontag, the famous Viennese prima, has been seriously ill of late, owing, probably, to overwork. On several occasions his memory has failed her, and not long ago, when singing in "Semiramide," he actually forgot what opera he was singing in, and stopped in the midst of a number because both the text and the music had suddenly escaped his memory. After some efforts the prompter succeeded in getting him started again. He has now taken a vacation.

There appears to be a perfect ballet-mania epidemic among composers at present. There are quite a number of recent operas in which the ballet-music is the best thing in the whole score, and in the same degree as the art of dancing seems to be neglected, the composers feel called upon to add to the attractiveness of the music. Rubinstein has written several pantomime ballets, and the latest news from Paris is to the effect that Ambroise Thomas, the composer of "Mignon" and "Hamlet," is busy a ballet for the Paris Grand Opera. It will be called "Miranda," and is based on Shakespeare's "Tempest."

The Plot of "Faust."

Faust, a German student, after a life of meditation and laborious research, becomes disgusted with the nothingness of human knowledge, and his own inability to unravel the mystic arcana of nature. He summons to his aid the Spirit of evil, who appears to him under the form of Mephistopheles. Through the supernatural power of the latter, Faust is straightway restored to youth with all its passions and illusions, and is at the same time endowed with personal beauty and luxuriances gard. Mephistopheles, as in a vision reveals to him the beauteous village-maid Margaret, with whom he instantly falls in love. He longs to become acquainted with her, and his wish is soon afterwards gratified. Margaret, captivated by her lovliness and for her virtue, has been left by her soldier brother Valentine, under the care of Dame Martha, a worthy but not very vigilant personage. The maiden at first rejects the stranger's advances, but Faust, aided by the demoniacal influence of Mephistopheles, who is anxious to destroy another human soul, urges his suit with such ardor that Margaret's resistance is at length overcome. Valentine, Margaret's brother, on returning with his comrades from the wars, learns what has occurred; he challenges his sister's seducer, but through the intervention of Mephistopheles, he is slain in the encounter. Margaret, horror-stricken at the calamity of which she is the original cause, gives way to paroxysm of frenzy, she kills her infant. For this she is thrown into prison. Faust, aided by Mephistopheles, obtains access to the cell in which she is immured. They both equally urge her to fly, but Margaret, in whom holier feelings have gained the ascendant, spurns their proffered aid, and places her sole reliance in prayer and repentance. Overcome at last by sorrow and remorse, with an earnest prayer on forgiveness on her lips, the unhappy girl expires. Mephistopheles triumphs at the catastrophe he has brought about, but a chorus of heavenly voices is heard, proclaiming that there is pardon for the repentant sinner, and the Evil One, averted and overcome, crouches sullenly as the selves heard, while the spirit of Margaret, borne by ministering angels, is wafted upwards to eternal home.

King and Musician.

A recluse, a bachelor, and a "woman hater;" all the match-makers from Rome to Stockholm have failed to catch so eligible a match as the King of Bavaria; and, so far as his private life is concerned, the most ascetic of moralists has no peccadillo to lay at the door of King Ludwig II. The only trouble is that, though now considerably over forty years of age, he has for more than twenty-one years declined to recognize the full responsibilities of his position. A Constitutional Sovereign, he has never for a moment shown the slightest inclination to infringe his coronation oath; and under his nominal sway Bavaria has prospered far beyond the wont of the Monarchy when it was ruled by more masterful men. No policy spirited beyond its powers has troubled it, and intrigue has for long been a stranger to Munich. But what the Viennese gossips object to, is that King Ludwig, while reigning, permits his subjects to rule themselves, since their Sovereign interferes in no way with the edicts which his ministers issue in his name. All he desires is, to be let alone. His Majesty is a musician, so devoted to the art that, during the lifetime of Wagner, he would for weeks at a stretch shut himself up with the Bayreuth composer, of whose works he is enthusiastically fond. He is also a composer himself: but, unlike most of the tuneful brethren, he declines to have his operas performed in public. They are mounted in the most perfect manner; but the singers and actors appeal to a "house" of one, ensconced behind the curtains of the Royal box. As a realist the King has imbibed all the whims of his friend Wagner. This is, however, not the only hobby of the King. He is also an enthusiast in building. Living the life of a hermit, entertaining no company, and steadily declining to share his tastes with a consort, he rears palace after palace, each more splendid than the last. Now it is a fairy Versailles on an island in a lake, now an idea of his own on an even more princely scale. If anything displeases him, the whole must be begun de novo, until the Royal architect is satisfied that the canons of art have been fulfilled. These fancies, however, cost money. The King has a civil list of nearly two hundred thousand pounds, which, for a bachelor, is more than sufficient; but he also inherited a considerable fortune. Yet, in spite of these resources, the King's building schemes have weighed rather heavily on his finances, and given rise to the stories with which, for some time past, the busy-bodies of Europe have been occupying their tongues.—London Standard.

No new operas were produced in Italy at the opening of the season, during the Christmas holidays, and it is noteworthy that the operas chosen at the leading houses were those which most strongly lean toward the modern dramatic school. Thus at Milan, "Carmen" was given; at Rome, "Aida;" at Naples, "Mefistofele;" at Palermo, Piacenza, and Vincenza, "Gioconda." "One of the most curious phases of modern music," says a London paper, "is the steady progress of the German school in Italy. This is in part owing to the pronounced preference of Sgambati and Boito for German music, and partly to the German commercial element in the large cities. The 'Deutscher Kunstlerverein' in Rome is now building a large concert-room for the better performance of choral and orchestral works."

THE OPERA SEASON.

THREE MORE YEARS OF OPERA IN GERMAN. — THE NEW OPERATIC POLICY. — MR. STANTON.

As was announced some time ago, the Directors of the Metropolitan Opera House have decided to continue the performances of Opera in German for at least three more years. In making this decision they were guided partly by the fact that, by extending the period of engagement over several seasons, more satisfactory arrangements could be made with some artists who are very much in demand abroad; and, still more, by the unmistakable manner in which the public has shown its approval of the policy pursued at this house during this and last season.

A few years ago it appeared as if the New York public had lost its interest in operatic performances. But it has now been made evident that the reason why opera languished here was simply because it was given in an antiquated style. New York was ten years behind the principal foreign cities, where the style of lyric opera, which requires nothing but one or two great singers, has long since gone out of fashion. The late lamented Dr Damrosch clearly saw how the interest in opera could be revived, and the policy adopted by him has been carried out since, with the gratifying results that are known to all.

In the first place, the Directors feel that they can claim, without fear of contradiction, that at the Metropolitan, for the first time, have the great modern operas been placed on the stage with a scenic splendor equal to that witnessed in Paris and Vienna. Nor has any expense and labor been spared in attempting to bring the orchestra and chorus to the highest standard of perfection; while the artists are of the best that could be secured for their respective parts; and the willingness of the leading artists to occasionally impersonate minor roles—one of the noblest traits of German artists—has greatly contributed to that excellence of ensemble which opera goers of the present day imperatively demand.

In making up the repertory, the Directors were naturally guided by the unmistakable preferences of the musical public. Last year, almost one-half of the performances given were devoted to three of Wagner's operas; and it was but just, therefore, to give the place of honor this year to the same composer, two more of whose operas have been added to the list. Meyerbeer, Gounod, Goldmark and Bizet are the other composers represented. Several others have been held in reserve, in case of necessity, but as the public interest in the nine operas so far produced has not decreased, it has not been deemed necessary to add to the arduous labors of the artists. Few people have any idea how much trouble is involved in placing an opera on the stage in the thorough manner in which it is done at the Metropolitan. Whenever a new opera is brought out, at a foreign opera house, five or six months are consumed in the preparations, whereas at this house, three novelties of the grandest proportions have been produced within little more than two months.

The three novelties of the season have also been the three greatest successes. Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba" has had a run unparalleled in the history of opera in America. Wagner's "Meistersinger," though written in his latest style, has already had seven performances, with ever-increasing audiences and appreciation, while his "Rienzi," though appealing to a different taste, appears to find the same favor.

Next year, possibly two more of Wagner's operas, and several works of other composers will be added to the repertory. Mr. Edmund C. Stanton will go to Europe in April or May to make arrangements with several famous artists for next season. The Board of Directors take this opportunity to call the public attention to the large share of this season's success which is due to the tact and managerial ability of Mr. Stanton. It is no sinecure to be placed at the head of an operatic enterprise of such gigantic proportions as that at the Metropolitan Opera House; but Mr. Stanton, by his justice and impartiality, and his courteous and obliging disposition has succeeded in repressing conflicts, and steering the operatic ship through every storm. The artists and every one connected with the Opera House loves and esteems him and this well deserved popularity has often enabled him to secure concessions that a less popular Director could not obtain. Mr. Stanton has also achieved a great success in the production and rendering of a new opera twelve times to overflowing houses, and also thus far not a single change has been made in the operas announced to be given. Two events unprecedented in the annals of operatic affairs in this country. The artists of the Opera House in order to show their appreciation of Mr. Stanton, have tendered him a complimentary benefit, but Mr. Stanton while highly gratified with this mark of their esteem declines the profferred honor.

How Chopin Composed.

Chopin, that genial poet on the piano, was affected in an extraordinary degree by the weather. With a blue sky and streaming sunshine, he produced those brilliant and fiery tone-poems which caused his friend and admirer, Robert Schumann, to remark: "Chopin is, after all, the boldest and proudest genius of our time." When the sky was overcast or still autumnal days, when naught was heard save the rustling of the leaves as they fell slowly from the trees, he wrote his melancholy "Nocturni." One day when the rain kept continuously drizzling down, his friend, Georges Sand called on him. She entered as he was playing a little piece, a prelude, which he had just finished. "Good heavens!" she exclaimed, "How melancholy! It is enough to kill one!" "Yes," rejoined Chopin, "I fancied while writing it that I was lying in my coffin with the rain dropping incessantly on the lid."

On another occasion he returned home on a fearfully tempestuous night from a brilliant ball. His imagination was powerfully affected by the contrast between the luxurious festivity and the wild turmoil of the elements, and he threw off the Grandiose Polonaise in A flat major, which faithfully reproduces the double phase of feeling: in the first part, glitter and proud jubilation, while in the middle movement we fancy we hear a troop of Uhlans on the desolate steppe as, with clattering hoofs, their horses dash forward through the nocturnal storm. The composer's fancy was worked up to such a pitch that, while he was playing the polonaise at night, he suddenly saw in a vision the door fly open and a proud gathering of Polish knights and noble ladies in the national costume pass, two and two, with the stately polonaise step, through the room.

CUT GLASS.

To clean cut glassware requires a solution. Soap will not answer the purpose, as it will adhere to the delicate cuts and crevices in the glass and also leave a scum over the surface. A most efficient article for this purpose, and used by the manufacturers of cut glassware, is James Pyle's Pearline Washing Compound. It will dissolve in water and thoroughly clean and polish the glass without leaving any substance in the carved work. La ies would do well to try Pearline for his purpose, but do not accept any injurious imitations, adulterated with gritty matter.—Chester, Pa., Times.

Wagner's "Parsifal."

TO BE GIVEN BY THE ORATORIO SOCIETY AS A DRAMATIC ORATORIO.

Now that Wagner has come to be looked upon here, no less than in his own country, as the greatest and most popular of all operatic composers, it might have been expected that his last work would be produced by the German artists at the Metropolitan Opera House. Unfortunately such a thing cannot be done. For, in accordance with Wagner's wishes, his widow is reserving the right of producing "Parsifal" on the stage, exclusively for Bayreuth, no other city having been allowed to give it except Munich, where the King, Wagner's old friend and most liberal patron, was permitted to enjoy a few performances, during which, as usual, he excluded all other spectators from the theatre.

The only possible way of hearing "Parsifal," therefore, is either to attend the festival given at Bayreuth almost every summer, or to give it in the concert hall, as a dramatic oratorio. This has already been done, with great success in London, where the work was given twice, the first time attracting an audience of 6,000, the second time of 8,000 auditors. New Yorkers, too, have been given an opportunity to listen to a few fragments; but the Oratorio Society will produce for the first time, at its third concert, the whole work, barring such cuts as are necessary to bring it within the limits of a concert performance.

To those who have not heard "Parsifal" at Bayreuth, some few portions will probably appear vague and obscure without the scenery and action. But the drama is so full of beautiful music which speaks for itself, that no one who listens attentively can fail to be delighted with it. Wagner's real "Swan Song" is not the melody with which Lohengrin greets his swan, but the sacred drama "Parsifal." For although it was his swan song, and written when the composer had almost reached his three score years and ten; it is yet characterized by a remarkable wealth of ideas and spontaneity of invention.

Even Dr. Hauslick, Wagner's most uncompromising opponent, was forced on hearing "Parsifal" to exclaim regarding Wagner's creative power: "For a man of Wagner's age (69), and with his system, it seems to me as 'Parsifal' to continue to be astounding. Any one who can write pieces of the enchanting, melodious charm of the flower-girl scene, and at the very end of the final scene in 'Parsifal' still has control of a power which his youngest contemporaries may envy him."

One of the most marvelous things in "Parsifal" is its delightful orchestration; and these brilliant and varied orchestral tints, it need not be said, can be enjoyed quite as well in the concert hall as in the theatre. Regarding the instrumentation, it was Hauslick again, who said the neatest thing: "'Parsifal' is scored in a surprisingly discreet manner. Much the art of orchestration. Wagner has not grown old; in 'Parsifal' this art has developed into pure magic, and for every change of mood conjures the most wonderful sounds in infinite shocks and variety."

"Parsifal" will be sung by the Oratorio Society, which has been enlarged this year, and by a special choir of boys. The soloists will be selected from the artists of the Metropolitan Opera House, including Fraulein Brandt, who alternated with Frau Materna in the role of Kundry when "Parsifal" was first produced at Bayreuth, in 1882. By reserving this difficult work for the third concert, the Society will be able to study it all winter, and the directors confidently anticipate that its performance will form a worthy climax of the season.

OPERA SEASON 1885-86.

The season will extend over thirteen weeks, which will include thirty-nine Subscription Nights and thirteen Matinees. Commencing on November 23d, the season will continue until Saturday, March 6th, 1886,

All the artists engaged are the best in Germany; but the Board of Directors desire to state that they do not rely upon the so-called Star-System, but upon the strength of the ensemble, and attention to every detail, to make the coming Season a success.

It may not be amiss to remind the public that Opera here differs from Opera abroad, in that it is supported by subsidy from individuals instead of from Governments, and the Board of Directors count upon the aid of all music lovers to assist the Stockholders in their endeavor to make New York a musical centre.

For this season engagements have been made with the following artists:

Wagner's "Rienzi."

THE COMPOSER'S OWN ESTIMATE OF IT—AN OPERA, NOT A MUSIC-DRAMA—PARIS AND DRESDEN—ITS GREAT SUCCESS.

In the short autobiographic sketch which is printed in the first volume of his literary works, Wagner relates that when he was a mere boy he spent two years in writing a colossal tragedy, in course of which forty-two persons lost their lives, most of whom he was obliged to bring back as ghosts in order to keep up the action.

"Rienzi," the first of his operas which has kept the stage, reminds one of this tragedy by its unparalleled accumulation of striking theatrical effects. "Such incessant roaring of trombones and tuba," says a German critic, "such indefatigable drumming and kettle-drumming, such inexorable exertions required of the lungs of chorus and solo singers, are not to be found in any other opera. . . . One would not believe it possible that the noise of the finale of the second act could be surpassed; but it is far exceeded by the march and battle song in the third. There, besides the full chorus and orchestra, an awe-inspiring military band on the stage contributes to the ensemble, large and small bells ring behind the scenes, and the noble Romans keep time to this by striking their shields with their swords."

There is a widely prevalent notion that Wagner classed this opera among the "artistic sins of his youth"; but as he himself explains, (vol. iv, p. 371) this expression, though used by him at a rehearsal in Berlin, was only made in the consciousness of the superior value of his later works, and not with any intention of disavowing "Rienzi," although his enemies eagerly and deliberately made use of it in that sense. That Wagner could not feel the same pride in "Rienzi" as in his later dramas, is partly due to the fact that these later dramas are written in an original style exclusively his own, while "Rienzi" is merely an imitation of the grand historic opera style, as developed in Auber's "Masaniello," Rosini's "Tell" and especially the operas of Meyerbeer and Spontini.

"In writing the text of 'Rienzi,' says Wagner, (vol. iv, p. 319) 'I had practically no other thought than that of writing an effective libretto. The 'Grand Opera,' with all its scenic and musical splendor, its accumulation of massive effects, musical and emotional, stood before my eyes; and the aim of my artistic ambition was not only to imitate it, but to surpass all previous examples in reckless extravagance.

"Nevertheless, I would be unjust to myself were I to name this ambition as the sole motive which guided me in the conception and execution of my 'Rienzi.' The subject really inspired me, and I added nothing to my conception which did not have direct reference to the source of this inspiration. . . . To the language and versification I gave no more care than seemed to me necessary for securing a good opera text, free from triviality. My aim was not to write duetts and trios; but they presented themselves here and there naturally, since I looked at my subject solely through the operatic spectacles. So again, I did not look in this subject for an excuse for a ballet, but with the eyes of an opera composer, I espied in it a festival which Rienzi had to give the populace, and in which he would have to place before them a dramatic spectacle from ancient history as a theatrical exhibition; and this was the story of Lucretia and the expulsion of the Tarquins connected therewith."

'That this pantomime," he adds in a footnote, "had to be omitted in the theatres where 'Rienzi' was given was an annoying disadvantage to me; for the ballet which took its place diverted criticism from my nobler intentions, and gave it nothing to see here except an ordinary operatic spectacle." And in another footnote he says that he reprinted the text in its original form "as a means of correcting the judgment of those who know the opera only in the mutilated form in which it is now given in the theatres, and who are therefore astonished at the clumsy manner in which the grotesque effects are piled on one another."

These notes show that Wagner had a good word even for this early and wayward child of his; nor can he have been deaf to the beauty of those numbers which are symphonically united in the overture and to the numerous passages which foreshow his later harmonic and melodic peculiarities.

The composition of "Rienzi" which is based on Bulwer's novel, was finished in Paris, where Wagner lived from 1839 to 1842. His efforts to get the opera produced there, failed however, notwithstanding the somewhat dubious assistance of Meyerbeer, who is said to have declared the text of "Rienzi" the best libretto he had ever seen. But on Oct. 20, 1842, "Rienzi" was produced at Dresden, and although the performance lasted six hours, its success was so great that, as a consequence, Wagner, who had previously been a starving Bohemian, obtained the place of Royal Operatic Conductor at Dresden, with a comfortable salary. "Rienzi" exactly suited the popular taste of the time, and had its author continued to write in that style he would have soon rivalled Meyerbeer in popularity. But with his next opera, "The Flying Dutchman," he began to introduce his dramatic reforms, which at first so alienated the public that it took them almost a generation to get accustomed to his new style, and to proclaim him at last the greatest and most popular operatic composer of the century, if not of all times.

Carl Goldmark.

One of the great successes of the present season at the Metropolitan Opera House is Carl Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba." Its success abroad has been lasting, for since its production at Vienna in 1873 it has retained its popularity and is at present the only opera composed during the past fifteen years which has held its own against Wagner's works, and promises to continue to do so. It owes this success to its dissimilarity from rather than its similarity to Wagner; for it is so different in subject and treatment that it does not evoke comparison.

In spite of the popular success the opera has now achieved in New York, little is known here of its composer, Carl Goldmark. Concert audiences are, of course, familiar with his instrumental works, but with the salient facts in the composer's life they are not acquainted.

Carl Goldmark is a Hungarian by birth. He manifested a strong love for music early in life, and was only too glad to avail himself of even the limited facilities for musical instruction which the little town in which he was born afforded. Fortunately his natural gift for music enabled him to make up, by himself, what was wanting in the teaching he received. Hence when, in 1850, he left his town for that Mecca of Musicians, Vienna, he was fairly proficient in violin playing. He found employment in a theatrical orchestra, and through this occupation, coupled with the scant remuneration of a music teacher, he managed to eke out a scant living. Before he arrived in the Austrian capital he had hardly touched a piano. But soon after coming to Vienna, in spite of his scant means, hired a piano, and began to teach himself to play on it—so successfully that in four years he appeared publicly as a pianist. He then took a short Conservatory course in thorough bass, counterpoint and harmony. This short course was sufficient to start him on the right track and enable him to pursue his studies in competition without the aid of a teacher. The result was, that in 1857 compositions of his figured for the first time on a concert programme. Among these was the "B-flat major string Quartette" which still holds its own.

Until this time Goldmark had found only little chance to devote to composition. For he had to spend most of his time in earning his daily bread. Soon after this, however, he appeared as a competitor for the prize of an annual stipend which the Austrian Government offers to the author of the most meritorious composition submitted. Goldmark won the prize, his chief competitor being Herbeck, who afterwards as director of the Imperial Opera House, avenged himself on Goldmark by delaying as long as possible the production of the "Queen of Sheba." Though the stipend which Goldmark obtained through this competition was not large, he at once gave up his position as an orchestra player and his music lessons and devoted himself entirely to composition. Goldmark's first production to gain international celebrity was his "Sakuntala" overture.

The "Queen of Sheba" was commenced in 1866 and finished in 1870. The merest chance directed Goldmark's attention to the availability of the subject for an opera libretto. The story runs as follows: One day, while passing an art store in Vienna with his friend Ignaz Brull, he saw a picture of the entrance of the Queen of Sheba into Jerusalem. "What a capital subject for a grand romantic opera!" he exclaimed. A couple of days afterwards Goldmark called on Mosenthal, the German dramatist, and proposed that he should write a libretto on the subject. The matter was discussed, Mosenthal went to work at once, and in three weeks enough of the libretto was ready for Goldmark to begin the composition of the principal numbers of the first act.

In 1870 the opera was completed and submitted to the management of the Imperial Opera House. For three years, owing to the personal enmity of Herbeck who declared that no work of Goldmark's should be produced as long as he was manager, the work lay untouched. In 1873, Professor Riedl, conductor of a Viennese musical society, chanced to give some numbers from the opera at a private concert at the residence of Herr Novikoff, the Russian Ambassador. They were so favorably received that Mme. Novikoff made inquiries in regard to the work and its composer. Finding out the circumstances which delayed the production of the "Queen of Sheba," she had her husband bring the matter to the attention of Prince Hohenlohe who, on making an investigation, ordered the immediate production of the work. Accordingly it was given for the first time in 1873, when it achieved overwhelming success.

Goldmark passes the summer and early fall in the country composing. In October he returns to Vienna and the winter and spring are spent in scoring, polishing and refining his work of the summer. He is very conscientious in his work, doing nothing merely for the sake of money. "Rubinstein and Kalt," he once said, "would make symphonies out of what I throw into my waste-basket." He has finished a new opera, "Merlin," which will soon be produced in Vienna.

Gounod's "Faust."

The merits as well as the shortcomings of Gounod's music are most clearly revealed in "Faust." Gounod is not what is called by the German s an "Original-genie," but an eclectic in the best sense of the word. The source of his inspiration lies in higher fountains, especially in Weber and Meyerbeer; on the German side he touches the domain of Wagner, on the French side that of Auber. But these foreign elements are so happily blended with Gounod's artistic individuality, that the result is something unquestionably new and characteristic, as the great success of his "Faust" attests. This individuality is most strongly revealed in the realms of sentiment, pre-eminently the love scenes, in which Gounod strikes chords of incomparable tenderness and passionate longing. For the highest degrees of passion, his powers of expression rarely suffice, and still less for the grand and sublime

To atone for this he has, for less exalted emotions and their lights and shadows, a great wealth of deli te and realistic colors. Gounod's m.sical creativeness is greatly aided by his ample knowledge and training in technical matters, in the vocal department (he is himself an excellent singer), as well as in the orchestral. His aims are always honest, his objects correct dramatic expression. His music has greater affinity with German music, than that of any other French composers.

Gounod's "Faust" was at first savagely attacked by some of the German critics, who did not neglect also to malign the public which had taken the opera to its heart. The critics erred. Every person who does not sacrifice the actual state of affairs to an unwarranted idealism must take pleasure in an opera which, by the side of numerous shortcomings, possesses so much that is brilliant, enchanting, and full of genuine feeling as "Faust." Musically it makes a purer impression on us than the "Prophete," the "Star of the North," and "Dinora," however much Meyerbeer may be Gounod's superior in energy and originality.

Boerne says somewhere that German literary products are almost either gold or copper, whereas in France the majority of authors write silver. This incisive criticism applies equally well to the opera composers of these two nations.—Translated for this Programme from Hanslick's "Moderne Oper."

Plot of "Die Meistersinger."

ACT I. Nuremberg, sixteenth century. Choral service in St. Catherine Church, with orchestral interludes depicting the feelings of Walter, a young knight, towards Eva, the daughter of the goldsmith Pogner—a case of mutual love at first sight. On her way out with her chaperone Magdalena, Walter accosts her and confesses his love, but hears she is no longer free, as she is to be the bride of the winner at a coming public singing match of the Meistersinger (or Master-singers). Walter resolves to join their guild and become a competitor. So he remains to be examined at their meeting. David, an apprentice, instructs him in regard to the pedantic mysteries and complicated rules for singing adopted by these master-singers. At last they appear in groups. Pogner announces what the prize is to be at the contest, and Walter, at his request, is examined—much to the disgust of the ugly and disagreeable Beckmesser, who proves to be Walter's only rival, all the other masters being married or widowers. Unfortunately, Beckmesser is chosen as critic, to note down on a blackboard, behind a screen, every fault made by Walter of the pedantic rules. Before Walter's song is half ended, he rushes out, his blackboard covered with marks. The above-mentioned poet, Hans Sachs, speaks in Walter's favor, but is outvoted by the others, and Walter is rejected.

ACT II. Hans Sachs' house to the left, Pogner's to the right. Apprentices make fun of David, who is in love with Magdalena. Eva hears of Walter's failure, and resolves to elope with him, but the appearance of the watchman compels them to hide. Once more they star, when the sound of a lute is heard. Beckmesser has come to serenade Eva. Just then Sachs, who was aware of the elopement, moves out his bench, hammers away at a shoe, and sings humorous songs, constantly interrupting the angry Beckmesser's serenade. David comes out, and seeing the disguised Magdalena at the window, listening to the serenade intended for Eva, becomes jealous, and unmercifully beats Beckmesser. The tumult awakens all the neighbors, who rush into the street and join in the fight, till suddenly the watchman's horn is heard again, and all disperse.

ACT III. Hans Sachs in his room reading and philosophising. David comes in, sings a charming song about St. John, and leaves. Walter, who, on account of the frustrated elopement had spent the night with Sachs, comes down and tells of a wonderful dream he had—the melody of the well-known prize-song. Sachs notes it down on paper, they leave, Beckmesser sneaks in and steals the song, thinking it is by the famous Sachs, and hoping to win the prize with it. Eva comes on to hear her sister-friend. Scene ends with the famous quintette. Last scene: a meadow with city of Nuremberg in background. Popular festival, singing and dancing. Come choruses of shoemakers, tailors, and bakers. Grand procession of master-singers. Prize contest. Beckmesser sings first, but gets confused and sings amusing nonsense, until his voice is drowned by laughter. Sachs proposes that anyone who can properly sing that song, though not a member of the Trade Union, shall get the prize. All agree, Walter steps forward, sings it, and wins the bride.

MESSRS. MASON & HAMLIN bid fair to become as famous for their Upright Pianos as they have long been for their world-renowned Cabinet Organs. Having experimented several years at great expense, and with the assistance of probably as able a corps of experts as can be found in any factory in the world, they have succeeded in producing a piano which has elected the warmest encomiums from the best judges. The distinguishing feature about it is an important improvement in the back of "stringing." The piano, which originated in their own factory. The strings are secured by metallic fastenings, instead of by the friction of pins set in wood, as has been the case, and the advantages resulting are numerous and highly important; among them are the following: Wonderful beauty and musical quality of tone, far less liability of getting out of tune, greater reliability in trying climates, and greater solidity of construction and durability. Mason & Hamlin have made 160,000 organs. They can hardly expect to make as many pianos, but they will doubtless be called upon to make a very large number. Boston Traveler

No new operas were produced in Italy at the opening of the season, during the Christmas holidays, and it is noteworthy that the operas chosen at the leading houses were those which most strongly lean toward the modern dramatic school. Thus at Milan, "Carmen" was given; at Rome, "Aida;" at Naples, "Mefistofele;" at Palermo, Pinccnza, and Vincenza, "Gioconda." "One of the most curious phases of modern music," says a London paper, "is the steady progress of the German school in Italy. This is in part owing to the pronounced preference of Sgambati and Boito for German music, and partly to the German commercial element in the large cities. The Deutscher Kunstlerverein in Rome is now building a large concert-room for the better performance of choral and orchestral works."

THE OPERA SEASON.

THREE MORE YEARS OF OPERA IN GERMAN.—THE NEW OPERATIC POLICY.—MR. STANTON.

As was announced some time ago, the Directors of the Metropolitan Opera House have decided to continue the performances of Opera in German for at least three more years. In making this decision they were guided partly by the fact that, by extending the period of engagement over several seasons, more satisfactory arrangements could be made with some artists who are very much in demand abroad; and, still more, by the unmistakable manner in which the public has shown its approval of the policy pursued at this house during this and last season.

A few years ago it appeared as if the New York public had lost its interest in operatic performances. But it has now been made evident that the reason why opera languished here was simply because it was given in an antiquated style. New York was ten years behind the principal foreign cities, where the style of lyric opera, which requires nothing but one or two great singers, has long since gone out of fashion. The late lamented Dr Damrosch clearly saw how the interest in opera could be revived, and the policy adopted by him has been carried out since, with the gratifying results that are known to all.

In the first place, the Directors feel that they can claim, without fear of contradiction, that at the Metropolitan, for the first time, have the great modern operas been placed on the stage with a scenic splendor equal to that witnessed in Paris and Vienna. Nor has any expense and labor been spared in attempting to bring the orchestra and chorus to the highest standard of perfection; while the artists are of the best that could be secured for their respective parts; and the willingness of the leading artists to occasionally impersonate minor roles—one of the noblest traits of German artists—has greatly contributed to that excellence of ensemble which opera goers of the present day imperatively demand.

In making up the repertory, the Directors were naturally guided by the unmistakable preferences of the musical public. Last year, almost one-half of the performances given were devoted to three of Wagner's operas; and it was but just, therefore, to give the place of honor this year to the same composer, two more of whose operas have been added to the list. Meyerbeer, Gounod, Goldmark and Bizet are the other composers represented. Several others have been held in reserve, in case of necessity but as the public interest in the nine operas so far produced has not decreased, it has not been deemed necessary to add to the arduous labors of the artists. Few people have any idea how much trouble is involved in placing an opera on the stage in the thorough manner in which it is done at the Metropolitan. Whenever a new opera is brought out, at a foreign opera house, five or six months are consumed in the preparations, whereas at this house, three novelties of the grandest proportions have been produced within little more than two months.

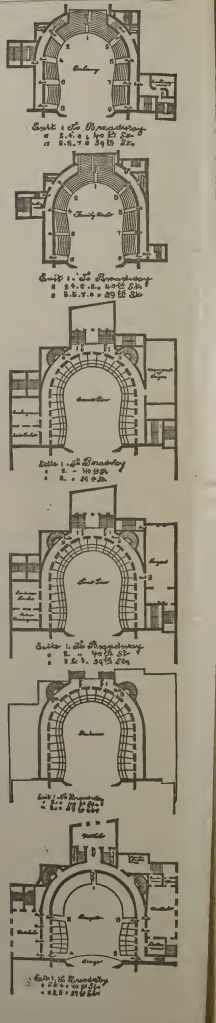
The three novelties of the season have also been the three greatest successes. Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba" has had a run unparalleled in the history of opera in America. Wagner's "Meistersinger," though written in his latest style, has already had seven performances, with ever-increasing audiences and appreciation, while his "Rienzi," though appealing to a different taste, appears to find the same favor.

Next year, possibly two more of Wagner's operas, and several works of other composers will be added to the repertory. Mr. Edmund C. Stanton will go to Europe in April or May to make arrangements with several famous artists for next season. The Board of Directors take this opportunity to call the public attention to the large share of this season's success which is due to the tact and managerial ability of Mr. Stanton. It is no sinecure to be placed at the head of an operatic enterprise of such gigantic proportions as that at the Metropolitan Opera House; but Mr. Stanton, by his justice and impartiality, and his courteous and obliging disposition has succeeded in repressing conflicts, and steering the operatic ship through every storm. The artists and every one connected with the Opera House loves and esteems him and this well deserved popularity has often enabled him to secure concessions that a less popular Diretor could not obtain. Mr. Stanton has also achieved a great success in the production and rendering of a new opera twelve times to overflowing houses, and also thus far not a single change has been made in the operas announced to be given. Two events unprecedented in the annals of operatic affairs in this country. The artists of the Opera House in order to show their appreciation of Mr. Stanton, have tendered him a complimentary benefit, but Mr. Stanton while highly gratified with this mark of their esteem declines the profferred honor.

How Chopin Composed.

Chopin, that genial poet on the piano, was affected in an extraordinary degree by the weather. With a blue sky and streaming sunshine, he produced those brilliant and fiery tone-poems which caused his friend and admirer, Robert Schumann, to remark: "Chopin is, after all, the boldest and proudest genius of our time." When the sky was overcast on still autumnal days, when naught was heard save the rustling of the leaves as they fell slowly from the trees, he wrote his melancholy "Nocturni." One day when the rain kept incessantly drizzling down, his friend, Georges Sand called on him. She entered as he was playing a little piece, a prelude, which he had just finished. "Good heavens!" she exclaimed. "How melancholy! It is enough to kill one!" "Yes," rejoined Chopin, "I fancied while writing it that I was lying in my coffin with the rain dropping incessantly on the lid."

On another occasion he returned home on a fearfully tempestuous night from a brilliant ball. His imagination was powerfully affected by the contrast between the luxurious festivity and the wild turmoil of the elements, and he threw off the Grandiose Polonaise in A flat major, which faithfully reproduces the double phase of feeling; in the first part, glitter and proud jubilation, while in the middle movement we fancy we hear a group of Uhlans on the desolate steppe as, with clattering hoofs, their horses dash forward through the nocturnal storm. The composer's fancy was worked up to such a pitch that, while he was playing the polonaise at night, he suddenly saw in a vision the door flu open and a proud gathering of Polish knights and noble ladies in the national costume pass, two and two, with the stately polonaise step, through the room.



CUT GLASS.

To clean cut glassware requires a solution. Soap will not answer the purpose, as it will adhere to the delicate cuts and crevices in the glass and also leave a scum over the surface. A most efficient article for this purpose, and used by the manufacturers of cut glassware, is James Pyle's Pearline Washing Compound. It will dissolve in water and thoroughly clean and polish the glass without leaving any substance in the carved work. Ladies would do well to try Pearline for this purpose, but do not accept any injurious imitations, adulterated with gritty matter.—Chester, Pa., Times.

Wagner's "Parsifal."

TO BE GIVEN BY THE ORATORIO SOCIETY AS A DRAMATIC ORATORIO.

Now that Wagner has come to be looked upon here, no less than in his own country, as the greatest and most popular of all operatic composers, it might have been expected that his last work would be produced by the German artists at the Metropolitan Opera House. Unfortunately such a thing cannot be done. For, in accordance with Wagner's wishes, his widow is reserving the right of producing "Parsifal" on the stage exclusively for Bayreuth, no other city having been allowed to give it except Munich, where the King, Wagner's old friend and most liberal patron, was permitted to enjoy a few performances, during which, as usual, he excluded all other spectators from the theatre.

The only possible way of hearing "Parsifal," therefore, is either to attend the festival given at Bayreuth almost every summer, or to give it in the concert hall, as a dramatic oratorio. This has already been done, with great success in London, where the work was given twice, the first time attracting an audience of 6,000, the second time of 8,000 auditors. New Yorkers, too, have been given an opportunity to listen to a few fragments; but the Oratorio Society will produce for the first time, at its third concert, the whole work, barring such cuts as are necessary to bring it within the limits of a concert performance.

To those who have not heard "Parsifal" at Bayreuth, some few portions will probably appear vague and obscure without the scenery and action. But the drama is so full of beautiful music which speaks for itself, that no one who listens attentively can fail to be delighted with it. Wagner's real "Swan Song" is not the melody with which Lohengrin greets his swan, but the sacred drama "Parsifal." For although it was his swan song, and written when the composer had almost reached his three score years and ten; it is yet characterized by a remarkable wealth of ideas and spontaneity of invention.

Even Dr. Hanslick, Wagner's most uncompromising opponent, was forced on hearing "Parsifal" to exclaim regarding Wagner's creative power: "For a man of Wagner's age (69), and with his system, it seems to me in 'Parsifal' to continue to be astounding. Any one who can write pieces of the enchanting, melo lious charm of the flower-girl scene, and of the energy of the final scene in 'Parsifal' still has control of a power which his youngest contemporaries may envy him."

One of the most marvelous things in "Parsifal" is its delightful orchestration; and these brilliant and varied orchestral tints, it need not be said, can be enjoyed quite as well in the concert hall as in the theatre. Regarding the instrumentation, it was Hauslick again, who said the neatest thing; "'Parsifal' is scored in a surprisingly discreet manner. In the art of orchestration, Wagner has not grown old; in 'Parsifal' this art has developed into pure magic, and for every change of mood conjures the most wonderful sounds in infinite shocks and variety."

"Parsifal" will be sung by the Oratorio Society, which has been enlarged this year, and by a special choir of boys. The soloists will be selected from the artists of the Metropolitan Opera House, including Fraulein Brandt, who alternated with Frau Materna in the role of Kundry when "Parsifal" was first produced at Bayreuth, in 1872. By reserving this difficult work for the third concert, the Society will be able to study it all winter, and the directors confidently anticipate that its performance will form a worthy climax of the season.

OPERA SEASON 1885-86.

The season will extend over thirteen weeks, which will include thirty-nine Subscription Nights and thirteen Matinees. Commencing on November 23d, the season will continue until Saturday, March 6th, 1886,

All the artists engaged are the best in Germany; but the Board of Directors desire to state that they do not rely upon the so-called Star-System, but upon the strength of the ensemble, and attention to every detail, to make the coming Season a success.

It may not be amiss to remind the public that Opera here differs from Opera abroad, in that it is supported by subsidy from individuals instead of from Governments, and the Board of Direct ors count upon the aid of all music lovers to assist the Stockholders in their endeavor to make New York a musical centre.

Wagner's "Rienzi."

THE COMPOSER'S OWN ESTIMATE OF IT—AN OPERA, NOT A MUSIC-DRAMA—PARIS AND DRESDEN—ITS GREAT SUCCESS.

In the short autobiographic sketch which is printed in the first volume of his literary works, Wagner relates that when he was a mere boy he spent two years in writing a colossal tragedy, in course of which forty-two persons lost their lives, most of whom he was obliged to bring back as ghosts in order to keep up the action.

"Rienzi," the first of his operas which has kept the stage, reminds one of this tragedy by its unparalleled accumulation of striking theatrical effects. "Such incessant roaring of trombones and tuba," says a German critic, "such indefatigable drumming and kettle-drumming, such inexorable exertions required of the lungs of chorus and solo singers, are not to be found in any other opera. . . . One would not believe it possible that the noise of the finale of the second act could be surpassed; but it is far exceeded by the march and battle song in the third. There, besides the full chorus and orchestra, an awe-inspiring military band on the stage contributes to the effect, large and small bells ring behind the scenes, and the noble Romans keep time to this by striking their shields with their swords."

There is a widely prevalent notion that Wagner classed this opera among the "juvenile sins of indiscretion" later as he himself explains, (vol. iv, p. 371) this expression, though used by him at a rehearsal in Berlin, was only made in the consciousness of the superior value of his later works, and not with any intention of disavowing "Rienzi," although his enemies eagerly and deliberately made use of it in that sense. That Wagner could not feel the same pride in "Rienzi" as in his later dramas, is partly due to the fact that these later dramas are written in an original style exclusively his own, while "Rienzi" is merely an imitation of the grand historic opera style, as developed in Auber's "Masaniello," Rosini's "Tell" and especially the operas of Meyerbeer and Spontini.

"In writing the text of 'Rienzi,' says Wagner, (vol. iv, p. 349) "I had practically no other thought in my mind of writing an effective libretto. The 'Grand Opera,' with all its scenic and musical splendor, its accumulation of massive effects, musical and emotional, stood before my eyes; and the aim of my artistic ambition was not only to imitate it, but to surpass all previous examples in reckless extravagance. . . . Nevertheless, I would be unjust to myself were I to name this ambition as the sole motive that guided me in the conception and execution of my Rienzi." The subject really inspired me, and I added nothing to my conception which did not have direct reference to the source of this inspiration. . . . To the language and versification I gave no more care than seemed to me necessary for securing a good opera text, free from triviality. My aim was not to write duetts and trios; but they presented themselves here and there naturally, since I looked at my subject solely through the operatic spectacles. So again, I did not look in this subject for an excuse for a ballet, but with the eyes of an opera composer, I espied in it a festival which Rienzi had to give the populace, and in which he would have to place before them a dramatic spectacle from ancient history as a theatrical exhibition; and this was the story of Lucretia and the expulsion of the Tarquins connected therewith."

"That this pantomime," he adds in a footnote, "had to be omitted in the theatres where 'Rienzi' was given was an annoying disadvantage to me; for the ballet which took its place diverted criticism from my nobler intentions, and gave it nothing to see here except an ordinary operatic spectacle." And in another footnote he says that he reprinted the text in its original form as a means of correcting the judgment of those who know the opera only in the mutilated form in which it is now given in the theatres, and who are therefore astonished at the clumsy manner in which the grotesque effects are piled on one another."

The same notes show that Wagner had a good word even for this early and wayward child of his; nor can he have been deaf to the beauty of those numbers which are symphonically united in the overture and to the numerous passages of melody scattered later harmonic and melodic peculiarities.

The composition of "Rienzi" which is based on Bulwer's novel, was finished in Paris, where Wagner lived from 1839 to 1842. His efforts to get the opera produced there, failed however, notwithstanding the somewhat dubious assistance of Meyerbeer, who is said to have declared the text of "Rienzi" the best libretto he had ever seen. But on Oct. 20, 1842, "Rienzi" was produced at Dresden, and although the performance lasted six hours, its success was so great that, as a consequence of which he had previously been a starving Bohemian, obtained the place of Royal Operatic Conductor at Dresden, with a comfortable salary. "Rienzi" exactly suited the popular taste of the time, and had its author continued to write in that style he would also soon rivalled Meyerbeer in popularity. But with his next opera, "The Flying Dutchman," he began to introduce his dramatic reforms, which at first so alienated the public that it took them almost a generation to get accustomed to his style so as to even proclaim him at last the greatest and most popular operatic composer of the century, if not of all times.

Carl Goldmark.

One of the great successes of the present season at the Metropolitan Opera House is Carl Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba." Its success abroad has been lasting, for since its production at Vienna in 1873 it has retained its popularity and is at present the only opera composed during the past fifteen years which has held its own against Wagner's works, and promises to continue to do so. It owes this success to its dissimilarity from rather than its similarity to Wagner; for it is so different in subject and treatment that it does not evoke comparison.

In spite of the popular success the opera has now achieved in New York, little is known here of its composer, Carl Goldmark. Concert audiences are, of course, familiar with his instrumental works, but with the salient facts in the composer's life they are not acquainted.

Carl Goldmark is a Hungarian by birth. He manifested a strong love for music early in life, and was only too glad to avail himself of even the scanty means for musical instruction which the little town in which he was born afforded. Fortunately his natural gift for music enabled him to make up by himself, what was wanting in the teaching he received. Hence when, in 1850, he left his town for that Mecca of Musicians, Vienna, he was fairly proficient in violin playing. He found employment in a theatrical orchestra, and through this occupation, coupled with the scant remuneration of a music teacher, he managed to eke out a scant living. Before he arrived in the Austrian capital he had hardly touched a piano. But soon after coming to Vienna he ran out of his scant means, hired a piano, and began to teach himself to play on it, so successfully that in four years he appeared publicly as a pianist. He then took a short Conservatory course in thorough bass, counterpoint and harmony. This short course was sufficient to start him on the right track and enable him to pursue his studies in composition without the aid of a teacher. The result was that in 1857 compositions of his figured for the first time on a concert programme. Among these was the "B-flat major string Quartette" which still holds its own.

Until this time Goldmark had found only little chance to devote to composition. For he had to spend most of his time in earning his daily bread. Soon after this, however, he appeared as a competitor for the prize of an annual stipend which the Austrian Government offers to the author of the most meritorious composition submitted. Goldmark won the prize, his chief competitor being Herbeck, who afterwards as director of the Imperial Opera House, avenged himself on Goldmark by delaying as long as possible the production of the "Queen of Sheba." Though the stipend which Goldmark obtained through this competition was not large, he at once gave up his position as an orchestra player and his music lessons and devoted himself entirely to composition. Goldmark's first production to gain international celebrity was his "Sakuntala" overture.

The "Queen of Sheba" was commenced in 1866 and finished in 1870. The merest chance directed Goldmark's attention to the availability of the subject for an opera libretto. The story runs as follows: One day, while passing an art store in Vienna with his friend Ignaz Brull, he saw a picture of the entrance of the Queen of Sheba into Jerusalem. "What a capital subject for a grand romantic opera!" he exclaimed. A couple of days afterwards Goldmark called on Mosenthal, the German dramatist, and proposed that he should write a libretto on the subject. The matter was discussed, Mosenthal went to work at once, and in three weeks enough of the libretto was ready for Goldmark to begin the composition of the principal numbers of the first act.

In 1870 the opera was completed and submitted to the management of the Imperial Opera House. For three years, owing to the personal enmity of Herbeck who declared that no work of Goldmark's should be produced as long as he was manager, the work lay untouched. In 1873, Professor Riedl, conductor of a Viennese musical society, chanced to give some numbers from the opera at a private concert at the residence of Herr Novikoff, the Russian Ambassador. They were so favorably received that Mme. Novikoff made inquiries in regard to the work and its composer. Finding out the circumstances which delayed the production of the "Queen of Sheba," she had her husband bring the matter to the attention of Prince Hohenlohe who, on making an investigation, ordered the immediate production of the work. Accordingly it was given for the first time in 1873, when it achieved overwhelming success.

Goldmark passes the summer and early fall in the country composing. In October he returns to Vienna and the winter and spring are spent in scoring, polishing and refining his work of the summer. He is very conscientious in his work, doing nothing merely for the sake of money. "Rubinstein and Rafi," he once said, "would make symphonies out of what I throw into my waste-basket." He has finished a new opera, "Merlin," which will soon be produced in Vienna.

Berlioz sneered at his critics, and gave them lashes worth bitterness as they sent. Finally, as they always carped at his works, he dug for them a neat little grave, and led them all into it. He composed his beautiful Flight into Egypt, and illuminating the quaint effects of the old school in many places, gave it to the public as a newly-discovered work of a hitherto unknown composer of the seventeenth century, named Pierre Ducré. All the reviewers were caught. They praised the beauty of the work. The differences between the ancient and modern schools were dwelt upon, sometimes to the disadvantage of the latter. Some even cited Berlioz as an example of the pernicious modern ideas, and praised the healthy simplicity of Pierre Ducré's style as a welcome relief from them; and then Berlioz stepped forth, and, in the character of composer, told them that Ducré was a myth, and thanked them or the good opinion of his own works.

Miss Emma Thursby will benefit by a Grand testimonial Concert, to be given her on Saturday, 3rd, at the Metropolitan Opera House. Some of the leading members of the Metropolitan Opera Co. will appear on that occasion, and altogether the occasion promises to be one of unusual musical interest.

Madame Marie Celli the celebrated vocal teacher, has published three songs: "A Valse," "L'Enantatrice" and "A Father's Tears," which for very meritorious compositions, and yet to be conventionally remunerated. They are to be had at Messrs. Ditson & Co., New York.

An English vocalist says he has found raisins a good stimulant for the voice when eaten fasting or shortly before singing; and adds: "It would be difficult to eat too many." Mme. Jenny Lind Goldschmidt also has great faith in the value of raisins, and largely recommends them to her pupils, as Dr. Thomas Brown remarks in "Voice Use and Stimulants."

THE PLOT OF "RIENZI."

Wagner's "Rienzi" is based on Bulwer's novel, "The Last of the Tribunes." The scene is laid in Rome, in the fourteenth century. Meyerbeer had that "Rienzi" had the best libretto of all operas he knew.

ACT I.—Night, scene in a Roman street, near church of St. John Lateran. The colonna, Orsini, and Colonnesi, with a leader, are attempting to abduct Irene. The latter, a beautiful girl, an Agnesi her captors, colonna, head of a rival patrician faction, appears and joins the girl. They fight. Adriano, the son of Colonna, other Orsinians and defenders join the fight. Fight continues, when Rienzi appears and defends Irene. Fight ceases, and each party draws to his arms. He boldly denounces the patricians for their conduct, and when the nobles make him a present of a diamond he tells them Rome is going to ruin, and that the war against the nobles. Rienzi, at last, bids the people keep in readiness for the attack, which is to be announced by the sound of trumpets. Sanctuary appeals to the people to disarm. Rienzi bids him save Adriano finally consents. The people go home, but about midnight the bell sounds, and the trumpet is heard, first at a distance, then nearer. Day breaks, and Rienzi appears and shows to the citizens the prisoners he has taken, headed by Rienzi on horseback. They swear fidelity to the tribune.

ACT II.—Messenger announces the victory of the plebeians. Rienzi appears as Tribune. The vanquished nobles do homage to him. Colonna comes to beg for his life, but Rienzi has his, and Orsini come to assassinate him at the ceremony, but Adriano, Irene, Colonna, and Orsini, and watch him. But Adriano, Irene, Colonna, and gladiatorial combat. Procession of anabaptists, but Rienzi, moved by a supplication from Irene, grants their petition. Orsini, the nobles are condemned to death. Rienzi's brother, for his father's life, and Rienzi, despite the pleading of his friends, pardons all the nobles, on the oath of submission.

ACT III.—Palace in Rome. Gay festival and ringing of church bells. The nobles, having broken their oath, are preparing again for battle. The people, having broken their oath, are preparing again for battle. The people, having broken their oath, are preparing again for battle. The people

Gounod's "Faust."

The merits as well as the shortcomings of Gounod's music are most clearly revealed in "Faust." Gounod is not what is called by the German s an "Original-genie," but an eclectic in the best sense of the word. The source of his inspiration lies in higher fountains, especially in Weber and Meyerbeer; on the German side he touches the domain of Wagner, on the French side that of Auber. But these foreign elements are so happily blended with Gounod's artistic individuality, that the result is something unquestionably new and characteristic, as the great success of his "Faust" attests. This individuality is most strongly revealed in the realms of sentiment, pre-eminently the love scenes, in which Gounod strikes chords of incomparable tenderness and passionate longing. For the highest degrees of passion, his powers of expression rarely suffice, and still less for the grand and sublime

To atone for this he has, for less exalted emotions and their lights and shadows, a great wealth of delicate and realistic colors. Gounod's musical creativeness is greatly aided by his ample knowledge and training in technical matters, in the vocal department (he is himself an excellent singer), as well as in the orchestral. His aims are always honest, his objects correct dramatic expression. His music has greater affinity with German music, than that of any other French composers.

Gunned's "Faust" was at first savagely attacked by some of the German critics, who did not neglect also to malign the public which had taken the opera to its heart. The critics erred. Every person who does not sacrifice the actual state of affairs to an unwarranted idealism must take pleasure in an opera which, by the side of numerous shortcomings, possesses so much that is brilliant, enchanting, and full of genuine feeling as "Faust." Musically it makes a purer impression on us than the "Prophete," the "Star of the North," and "Dinora," however much Meyerbeer may be Gounod's superior in energy and originality.

Boerne says somewhere that German literary products are almost either gold or copper, whereas in France the majority of authors write silver. This incisive criticism applies equally well to the opera composers of these two nations. Translated for this Programme from Hanslick's "Moderne Oper."

MESSRS. MASON & HAMLIN left fair to become as famous for their Upright Pianos as they have long been for their world-renowned, Cabinet Organs. Having experimented several years at great expense, and with the assistance of (probably as able a corps of experts as can be found in any factory in the world, they have succeeded in producing a piano which has elicited the warmest encomiums from the best judges. The distinguishing feature about it is an important improvement in the scale of "overstrung" the piano, which originated in their own factory. The strings are secured by metallic fastenings, instead of by the friction of pins set in wood, as has been the case, and the advantages resulting are numerous and highly important among them are the following: Wonderful purity and musical quality of tone, far less liability to getting out of tune, greater reliability in trying climates, and greater solidity of construction and durability. Mason & Hamlin have made 150,000 organs. They can hardly expect to make as many pianos, but they will doubtless be entitled upon to make a very large number. Boston Traveler

No new operas were produced in Italy at the opening of the season, during the Christmas holidays, and it is noteworthy that the operas chosen at the leading houses were those which most strongly lean toward the modern dramatic school. Thus at Milan, "Carmen" was given; at Rome, "Aida;" at Naples, "Mefistofele;" at Palermo, Piacenza, and Vincenza, "Gioconda." "One of the most curious phases of modern music," says a London paper, "is the steady progress of the German school in Italy. This is in part owing to the pronounced preference of Sgambati and Boito for German music, and partly to the German commercial element in the large cities. The 'Deutscher Kunstlerverein' in Rome is now building a large concert-room for the better performance of choral and orchestral works."

THE OPERA SEASON.

THREE MORE YEARS OF OPERA IN GERMAN.—THE NEW OPERATIC POLICY.—MR. STANTON.

As was announced some time ago, the Directors of the Metropolitan Opera House have decided to continue the performances of Opera in German for at least three more years. In making this decision they were guided partly by the fact that, by extending the period of engagement over several seasons, more satisfactory arrangements could be made with some artists who are very much in demand abroad; and, still more, by the unmistakable manner in which the public has shown its approval of the policy pursued at this house during this and last season.

A few years ago it appeared as if the New York public had lost its interest in operatic performances. But it has now been made evident that the reason why opera languished here was simply because it was given in an antiquated style. New York was ten years behind the principal foreign cities, where the style of lyric opera, which requires nothing but one or two great singers, has long since gone out of fashion. The late lamented Dr Damrosch clearly saw how the interest in opera could be revived, and the policy adopted by him has been carried out since, with the gratifying results that are known to all.

In the first place, the Directors feel that they can claim, without fear of contradiction, that at the Metropolitan, for the first time, have the great modern operas been placed on the stage with a scenic splendor equal to that witnessed in Paris and Vienna. Nor has any expense and labor been spared in attempting to bring the orchestra and chorus to the highest standard of perfection; while the artists are of the best that could be secured for their respective parts; and the willingness of the leading artists to occasionally impersonate minor roles—one of the noblest traits of German artists—has greatly contributed to that excellence of ensemble which operatic goers of the present day impperatively demand.

In making up the repertory, the Directors were naturally guided by the unmistakable preferences of the musical public. Last year, almost one-half of the performances given were devoted to three of Wagner's operas; and it was but just, therefore, to give the place of honor this year to the same composer, two more of whose operas have been added to the list. Meyerbeer, Gounod, Goldmark and Bizet are the other composers represented. Several others have been held in reserve, in case of necessity; but as the public interest in the nine operas so far produced has not decreased, it has not been deemed necessary to add to the arduous labors of the artists. Few people have any idea how much trouble is involved in placing an opera on the stage in the thorough manner in which it is done at the Metropolitan. Whenever a new opera is brought out, at a foreign opera house, five or six months are consumed in the preparations, whereas at this house, three novelties of the grandest proportions have been produced within little more than two months.

The three novelties of the season have also been the three greatest successes. Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba" has had a run unparalleled in the history of opera in America. Wagner's "Meistersinger," though written in his latest style, has already had seven performances, with ever-increasing audiences and appreciation, while his "Rienzi," though appealing to a different taste, appears to find the same favor.

Next year, possibly two more of Wagner's operas, and several works of other composers will be added to the repertory. Mr. Edmund C. Stanton will go to Europe in April or May to make arrangements with several famous artists for next season. The Board of Directors take this opportunity to call the public attention to the large share of this season's success which is due to the tact and managerial ability of Mr. Stanton. It is no sinecure to be placed at the head of an operatic enterprise of such gigantic proportions as that at the Metropolitan Opera House; but Mr. Stanton, by his justice and impartiality, and his courteous and obliging disposition has succeeded in repressing conflicts, and steering the operatic ship through every storm. The artists and every one connected with the Opera House loves and esteems him and this well deserved popularity has often enabled him to secure concessions that a less popular Director could not obtain. Mr. Stanton has also achieved a great success in the production and rendering of a new opera twelve times to overflowing houses, and also thus far not a single change has been made in the operas announced to be given. Two events unprecedented in the annals of operatic affairs in this country. The artists of the Opera House in order to show their appreciation of Mr. Stanton, have tendered him a complimentary benefit, but Mr. Stanton while highly gratified with this mark of their esteem declines the profferred honor.

How Chopin Composed.

Chopin, that genial poet on the piano, was affected in an extraordinary degree by the weather. With a blue sky and streaming sunshine he produced those brilliant and fiery tone-poems which caused his friend and admirer, Robert Schumann, to remark: "Chopin is, after all, the boldest and proudest genius of our time." When the sky was overcast on still autumnal days, when naught was heard save the rustling of the leaves as they fell slowly from the trees, he was melancholy "Notturni." One day when the rain kept continuously drizzling down, his friend, Georges Sand, called on him. She entered as he was playing a little piece, a prelude, which he had just finished. "Good heavens!" she exclaimed. "How melancholy! It is enough to kill one!" "Yes," rejoined Chopin, "I fancied while writing it that I was lying in my coffin with the rain dropping incessantly on the lid."

On another occasion he returned home on a fearfully tempestuous night from a brilliant ball. His imagination was powerfully affected by the contrast between the luxurious festivity and the wild turmoil of the elements, and he threw off the Grandiose Polonaise in A flat major, which faithfully reproduces the double phase of feeling: in the first part, glitter and proud jubilation, while in the middle movement we fancy we hear a group of Uhlans on the desolate steppe as, with clattering hoofs, their horses dash forward through the nocturnal storm. The composer's fancy was worked up to such a pitch that, while he was playing the polonaise at night, he suddenly saw in a vision the door fly open and a proud gathering of Polish knights and noble ladies in the national costume pass two and two, with the stately polonaise step, through the room.

CUT GLASS.

To clean cut glassware requires a solution. Soap will not answer the purpose, as it will adhere to the delicate cuts and crevices in the glass and also leave a scum over the surface. A most efficient article for this purpose, and used by the manufacturers of cut glassware, is James Pyle's Pearline Washing Compound. It will dissolve in water and thoroughly clean and polish the glass without leaving any substance in the carved work. Ladies would do well to try Pearline for this purpose, but do not accept any injurious imitations, adulterated with gritty matter.—Chester, Pa., Times.

Wagner's "Parsifal."

TO BE GIVEN BY THE ORATORIO SOCIETY AS A DRAMATIC ORATORIO.

Now that Wagner has come to be looked upon here, no less than in his own country, as the greatest and most popular of all operatic composers, it might have been expected that his last work would be produced by the German artists at the Metropolitan Opera House. Unfortunately such a thing cannot be done. For, in accordance with Wagner's wishes, he widow is reserving the right of producing "Parsifal" on the stage, exclusively for Bayreuth, no other city having been allowed to give it except Munich, where the King, Wagner's old friend and most liberal patron, was permitted to enjoy a few performances, during which, as usual, he excluded all other spectators from the theatre.

The only possible way of hearing "Parsifal," therefore, is either to attend the festival given at Bayreuth almost every summer, or to give it in the concert hall, as a dramatic oratorio. This has already been done, with great success in London, where the work was given twice, the first time attracting an audience of 6,000, the second time of 8,000 auditors. New Yorkers, too, have been given an opportunity to listen to a few fragments; but the Oratorio Society will produce for the first time, at its third concert, the whole work, barring such cuts as are necessary to bring it within the limits of a concert performance.

To those who have not heard "Parsifal" at Bayreuth, some few portions will probably appear vague and obscure without the scenery and action. But the drama is so full of beautiful music which speaks for itself, that no one who listens attentively can fail to be delighted with it. Wagner's real "Swan Song" is not the melody with which Lohengrin greets his swan, but the sacred drama "Parsifal." For although it was in a swan song, and in the opera when the composer had almost reached his three score years and ten; it is yet characterized by a remarkable wealth of ideas and spontaneity of invention.

Even Dr. Hanslick, Wagner's most uncompromising opponent, was forced on hearing "Parsifal" to exclaim regarding Wagner's creative power: "For a man of Wagner's age (69, and with his system, it seems to me in 'Parsifal' to continue to be astounding. Any one who can write pieces of the enchanting, melodious character of the flower-girl scene, and of the energy of the hunt scene in 'Parsifal' still has control of a power which his youngest contemporaries may envy him."

One of the most marvelous things in "Parsifal" is its delightful orchestration; and these brilliant and varied orchestral tints, it need not be said, can be enjoyed quite as well in the concert hall as in the theatre. Regarding the instrumentation, it was Hanslick again, who said the neatest thing: "Parsifal' is accredited with a surprisingly discreet manner. In the art of orchestration. Wagner has not grown old; in 'Parsifal' this art has developed into pure magic, and for every change of mood conjures the most wonderful sounds in infinite shocks and variety."

"Parsifal" will be sung by the Oratorio Society, which has been enlarged this year, and by a special choir of boys. The soloists will be selected from the artists of the Metropolitan Opera House, including Fraulein Brandt, who alternated with Frau Materna in the role of Kundry when "Parsifal" was first produced at Bayreuth, in 1872. By reserving this difficult work for the third concert, the Society will be able to study it all winter, and the directors confidently anticipate that its performance will form a worthy climax of the season.

OPERA SEASON 1885-86.

The season will extend over thirteen weeks, which will include thirty-nine Subscription Nights and thirteen Matinees. Commencing on November 23d, the season will continue until Saturday, March 6th, 1886.

All the artists engaged are the best in Germany; but the Board of Directors desire to state that they do not rely upon the so-called Star-System, but upon the strength of the ensemble, and attention to every detail, to make the coming Season a success.

It may not be amiss to remind the public that Opera here differs from Opera abroad, in that it is supported by subsidy from individuals instead of from Governments, and the Board of Directors count upon the aid of all music lovers to assist the Stockholders in their endeavor to make New York a musical centre.

For this season engagements have been made with the following artists:

Wagner's "Rienzi."

THE COMPOSER'S OWN ESTIMATE OF IT—AN OPERA, NOT A MUSIC-DRAMA—PARIS AND DRESDEN—ITS GREAT SUCCESS.

In the short autobiographic sketch which is printed in the first volume of his literary works, Wagner relates that when he was a mere boy he spent two years in writing a colossal tragedy, in course of which forty-two persons lost their lives, most of whom he was obliged to bring back as ghosts in order to keep up the action.

"Rienzi," the first of his operas which has kept the stage, reminds one of this tragedy by its unparalleled accumulation of striking theatrical effects. "Such incessant roaring of trombones and tuba," says a German critic, "such indefatigable drumming and kettle-drumming, such incxorable exertions required of the lungs of chorus and solo singers, are not to be found in any other opera."

One would not believe it possible that the noise of the finale of the second act could be surpassed; but it is far exceeded by the march and battle song in the third. There, besides the full chorus and orchestra, an awe-inspiring military band on the stage contributes to the ensemble, large and small bells ring behind the scenes, and the noble Romans keep time to this by striking their shields with their swords."

There is a widely prevalent notion that Wagner classed this opera among the "artistic sins of his earlier"; but as he himself explains, (vol. iv, p. 371) this expression, though used by him at a rehearsal in Berlin, was only made in the consciousness of the superior value of his later works, and not with any intention of disavowing "Rienzi," although his enemies eagerly and deliberately made use of it in that sense. That Wagner could not feel the same pride in "Rienzi" as in his later dramas, is partly due to the fact that these later dramas are written in an original style exclusively his own, while "Rienzi" is merely an imitation of the grand historic opera style, as developed in Auber's "Masaniello," Rosini's "Tell" and especially the operas of Meyerbeer and Spontini.

"In writing the text of 'Rienzi,' says Wagner, (vol. iv, p. 319): "I had practically no other thought than that of writing an effective libretto. The 'Grand Opera,' with all its scenic and musical splendor, its accumulation of massive effects, musical and emotional, stood before my eyes; and the aim of my artistic ambition was not only to imitate it, but to surpass all previous examples in reckless extravagance.

"Nevertheless, I would be unjust to myself were I to name this ambition as the sole motive that guided me in the conception and execution of my Rienzi.' The subject really inspired me, and I added nothing to my concept which did not have direct reference to the source of this inspiration. . . . To the language and versification I gave no more care than seemed to me necessary for securing a good opera text, free from triviality. My aim was not to write duetts and trios; but they presented themselves here and there naturally, since I looked at my subject solely through the operatic spectacles. So again, I did not look in this subject for an excuse for a ballet, but with the eyes of an opera composer, I espied in it a festival which Rienzi had to give the populace, and in which he would have to place before them a dramatic spectacle from ancient history as a theatrical exhibition; and this was the story of Lucretia and the expulsion of the Tarquins connected therewith."

'That this pantomime," he adds in a footnote, "had to be omitted in the theatres where 'Rienzi' was given was an annoying disadvantage to me; for the ballet which took its place diverted criticism from my nobler intentions, and gave it nothing to see here except an ordinary operatic spectacle." And in another footnote he says that he reprinted the text in its original form for the sake of correcting the judgment of those who know the opera only in the mutilated form in which it is now given in the theatres, and who are therefore astonished at the clumsy manner in which the grotesque effects are piled on one another."

These notes show that Wagner had a good word even for this early and wayward child of his; nor can he have been deaf to the beauty of those numbers which are symphonically united in the overture and to the numerous passages which foretell his later, harmonic and melodic peculiarities.

The composition of "Rienzi" which is based on Bulwer's novel, was finished in Paris, where Wagner lived from 1839 to 1842. His efforts to get the opera produced there, failed however, notwithstanding the somewhat dubious assistance of Meyerbeer, who is said to have declared the text of "Rienzi" the best libretto he had ever seen. But on Oct. 20, 1842, "Rienzi" was produced at Dresden, and although the performance lasted six hours, its success was so great that, as a consequence, Wagner, who had previously been a starving Bohemian, obtained the place of Royal Operatic Conductor at Dresden, with a comfortable salary. "Rienzi" exactly suited the popular taste of the time, and had its author continued to write in that style he would have soon rivalled Meyerbeer in popularity. But with his next opera, "The Flying Dutchman," he began to introduce his dramatic reforms, which at first so alienated the public that it took them almost a generation to get accustomed to his new style, and to proclaim him at last the greatest and most popular operatic composer of the century, if not of all times.

Carl Goldmark.

One of the great successes of the present season at the Metropolitan Opera House is Carl Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba." Its success abroad has been lasting, for since its production at Vienna in 1873 it has retained its popularity and is at present the only opera composed during the past fifteen years which has held its own against Wagner's works, and promises to continue to do so. It owes its success to its dissimilarity from rather than its similarity to Wagner; for it is so different in subject and treatment that it does not evoke comparison.

In spite of the popular success the opera has now achieved in New York, little is known here of its composer, Carl Goldmark. Concert audiences are, of course, familiar with his instrumental works, but with the salient facts in the composer's life they are not acquainted.

Carl Goldmark is a Hungarian by birth. He manifested a strong love for music early in life, and was only too glad to avail himself of even the limited facilities for musical instruction which the little town in which he was born afforded. Fortunately his natural gift for music enabled him to make up, by himself, what was wanting in the teaching he received. Hence when, in 1850, he left his town for that Mecca of Musicians, Vienna, he was fairly proficient in violin playing. He found employment in a theatrical orchestra, and through this occupation, coupled with the scant remuneration of a music teacher, he managed to eke out a scant living. Before he arrived in the Austrian capital he had hardly touched a piano. Soon after coming to Vienna, he, in spite of his scant means, hired a piano, and began to teach himself to play on it—so successfully that in four years he appeared publicly as a pianist. He then took a short Conservatory course in thorough bass, counterpoint and harmony. This short course was sufficient to start him on the right track and enable him to continue his studies in composition without the aid of a teacher. The result was, that in 1857 compositions of his figured for the first time on a concert programme. Among these was the "B-flat major string Quartette" which still holds its own.

Until this time Goldmark had found only little chance to devote to composition. For he had to spend most of his time in earning his daily bread. Soon after this, however, he appeared as a competitor for the prize of an annual stipend which the Austrian Government offers to the author of the most meritorious composition submitted, Goldmark won the prize, his chief competitor being Herbeck, who afterwards as director of the Imperial Opera House, avenged himself on Goldmark by delaying as long as possible the production of the "Queen of Sheba." Though the stipend which Goldmark obtained through this competition was not large, he at once gave up his position as an orchestra player and his music lessons and devoted himself entirely to composition. Goldmark's first production to gain international celebrity was his "Sakuntala" overture.

The "Queen of Sheba" was commenced in 1866 and finished in 1870. The merest chance directed Goldmark's attention to the availability of the subject for an opera libretto. The story runs as follows: One day, while passing an art store in Vienna with his friend Ignaz Brull, he saw a picture of the entrance of the Queen of Sheba into Jerusalem. "What a capital subject for a grand romantic opera!" he exclaimed. A couple of days afterwards Goldmark called on Mosenthal, the German dramatist, and proposed that he should write a libretto on the subject. The matter was discussed, Mosenthal went to work at once, and in three weeks enough of the libretto was ready for Goldmark to begin the composition of the principal numbers of the first act.

In 1870 the opera was completed and submitted to the management of the Imperial Opera House. For three years, owing to the personal enmity of Herbeck, it was declared that no work of Goldmark's should be produced as long as he was manager, the score lay untouched. In 1873, Professor Riedl, conductor of a Viennese musical society, chanced to give some numbers from the opera at a private concert at the residence of Herr Novikoff, the Russian Ambassador. They were so favorably received that Mme. Novikoff made inquiries in regard to the work and its composer. Finding out the circumstances which delayed the production of the "Queen of Sheba," she had her husband bring the matter to the attention of Prince Hohenlohe who, on making an investigation, ordered the immediate production of the work. Accordingly it was given for the first time in 1873, when it achieved overwhelming success.

Goldmark passes the summer and early fall in the country composing. In October he returns to Vienna and the winter and spring are spent in scoring, polishing and refining his work of the summer. He is very conscientious in his work, doing nothing merely for the sake of money. "Rubinstein and Rulf," he once said, "would make symphonies out of what I throw into my waste-basket." He has finished a new opera, "Merlin," which will soon be produced in Vienna.

The First "Rienzi."

From Germany the news has just come of the death of the famous tenor Tichatschek, whom Wagner especially admired, and who created the rôle of "Rienzi" at its first performance in Dresden forty-four years ago. In 1870, when Tichatschek celebrated the fortieth anniversary of his connection with the stage, emperors, kings, and musicians vied in their endeavors to honor him. The members of the royal opera at Dresden presented him with a golden laurel wreath, on the leaves of which were inscribed the names of forty of his leading rôles.

To Tichatschek's skill and enthusiasm waspartly due the great success of "Rienzi" in Dresden. Wagner relates that the performance lasted six hours on the first night; and although the audience remained to the end, he felt the next day that extensive cuts would have to be made; so he applied the pruning knife freely. But to his great astonishment when he met the artists on the following day, he was told that they were going to leave out this and that page which he had marked. "But why not?" asked Wagner. "Because," the answer was, "Tichatschek has been here and told us not to leave it out." In the evening, Wagner had an interview with Tichatschek, who told him, with tears in his eyes, "I won't have any cuts made; it was heavenly!" And the leading musical papers of the time remarked that it was a pity to sacrifice a single bar, and that it was very complimentary to Wagner that the singers themselves opposed his intended excisions.

The Story of Lohengrin.

ACT I.—The rising curtain reveals a meadow near Antwerp, on which King Henry has assembled the nobles of Brabant. Count Telramund, whose offer of marriage has been refused by Elsa, Princess of Brabant, seeks to avenge himself by accusing her of having murdered her younger brother, in order that she might share the rule of the country with a secret lover. Elsa appears before the King, declares her innocence, and tells of a vision in which a knight appeared to her, promising to be her champion. The Herald's first call for her knight remains unanswered, but after the second a knight appears on a boat drawn by a swan. After making Elsa promise never to ask him who he is or whence he came, he vanquishes Telramund, but generously spares his life.

ACT II.—Telramund and his wife Ortrud are before the palace. The two plot revenge, and Ortrud, who is a witch, knows that if she can induce Elsa to ask Lohengrin the forbidden question, he will have to leave her. So when Elsa is about to enter the church, she takes her aside, and hints that Lohengrin is a sorcerer. Subsequently Telramund interrupts the bridal pair and accuses Lohengrin of witchcraft, but is obliged to yield to the popular indignation, and the bridal procession moves on.

ACT III.—The scene at the opening of Act III. represents the bridal chamber. The evil insinuations of Ortrud leave Elsa no peace, and, notwithstanding her husband's warning, she yields to her anxious curiosity and asks the fatal question about his name and home. Hardly has she uttered these words, when Telramund rushes in to assassinate Lohengrin, who, however, passes his own sword through his enemy. The scene changes to the same meadow seen in Act I. The body of Telramund is brought before the King, and Lohengrin announces that he is obliged to depart, and that he is one of the knights of the Holy Grail whose mission is to assist innocent persons in distress, but who can only do so on condition of concealing their origin. The swan now arrives to take him away, when Ortrud advances and announces that the swan is no one else than Elsa's brother, converted by Ortrud's magic arts into a swan. Lohengrin's prayer changes him back to human form, and a dove having taken its place, the Knight departs.

From 1829 to 1860, with few exceptions, Meyerbeer passed the summer months every year at Spa. An eyewitness thus describes him as he appeared there: He was invariably dressed in a ill-fitting black frock coat, with a black silk neck-cloth wound several times round his throat, high and stiff shirt-collars, and tight trowsers with straps. His gloves were many sizes too large for him, and he wore a tall silk hat falling not overgracefully on the nape of his neck. He always carried a huge cotton umbrella under his left arm when he didn't use it as a walking-stick. When on foot he shambled along with a tottering step, as if he were blind; but his usual mode of locomotion was an insecure seat on a donkey, his legs dangling almost on the ground. Among the composer's peculiarities was a horror of cats, the mere sight of one throwing him into a nervous fit.

Gounod's "Faust."

The merits as well as the shortcomings of Gounod's music are most clearly revealed in "Faust." Gounod is not what is called by the German s an "Original-genie," but an eclectic in the best sense of the word. The source of his inspiration lies in higher fountains, especially in Weber and Meyerbeer; on the German side he touches the domain of Wagner, on the French side that of Auber. But these foreign elements are so happily blended with Gounod's artistic individuality, that the result is something unquestionably new and characteristic, as the great success of his "Faust" attests. This individuality is most strongly revealed in the realms of sentiment, pre-eminently the love scenes, in which Gounod strikes chords of incomparable tenderness and passionate longing. For the highest degrees of passion, his powers of expression rarely suffice, and still less for the grand and sublime.

To atone for this he has, for less exalted emotions and their lights and shadows, a great wealth of deli te and realistic colors. Gounod's musical creativeness is greatly aided by his ample knowledge and training in technical matters, in the vocal department (he is himself an excellent singer), as well as in the orchestral. His aims are always honest, his objects correct dramatic expression. His music has greater affinity with German music, than that of any other French composers.

Gunnod's "Faust" was at first savagely attacked by some of the German critics, who did not neglect also to malign the public which had taken the opera to its heart. The critics erred. Every person who does not sacrifice the actual state of affairs to an unwarranted idealism must take pleasure in an opera which, by the side of numerous shortcomings, possesses so much that is brilliant, enchanting, and full of genuine feeling as "Faust." Musically it makes a purer impression on us than the "Prophete," the "Star of the North," and "Dinora," however much Meyerbeer may be Gounod's superior in energy and originality.

Boerne says somewhere that German literary products are almost either gold or copper, whereas in France the majority of authors write silver. This incisive criticism applies equally well to the opera composers of these two nations.—Translated for this Programme from Hanslick's "Moderne Oper."

MESSRS. MASON & HAMLIN had fair to lose much fame for their Upright Pianos as they have long been for their world-renowned Cabinet Organs. Having experimented until they are at great expense, and with the assistance of probably as able a corps of experts as can be found in any factory in the world, they have succeeded in producing a piano which has also won the warmest encomiums from the best makers. The distinguishing feature about it is an important improvement in the kind of strings for the piano, which originated in their own factory. The strings are secured by metallic fastenings instead of by the friction of pins as in wood, as has been the case, and the advantages are obvious: are more even and likely important. Among them are the following: Wonderful power and musical quality of tone, far beyond any thing out of the greater reliability in tuning, climates, and greater solidity of construction and durability. Mason & Hamlin have made 100,000 organs. They can hardly expect to have so many pianos but they will doubtless be called upon to make a very large number. Boston Traveler

The following, from the founder of the Oratorio and Symphony Societies, and of the German Opera of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York City, attests the superiority of the Knabe Piano:

Messrs. Wm. Knabe & Co., New York and Baltimore.

Gentlemen:—I take pleasure to state that the Pianos of your manufacture deserve fully the fame they have acquired throughout the world. Your instruments—Grands, Squares and Uprights—are perfect in power and sweetness of tone; remarkable for the easy and even touch; in fact, first-class in every respect.

AN ARISTOCRATIC ART.

"Opera, whatever its merits and defects, is essentially a royal and an aristocratic entertainment. The drama was started by Thespis in a cart. The opera, on the other hand, was founded by popes, cardinals, and kings. The first operatic libretto, that of Poliziano's "Orfeo," was the work of Cardinal Riareo, nephew of Sixtus IV. Pope Clement IX. was the author of no less than seven libretti. The popes, indeed, used in former days to keep up an excellent theatre.'—H. S. Edwards.

CHINESE SINGING.

The Chinese have in their classification of eight musical sounds utterly omitted to make any mention of the sound of the human voice. In all their great ceremonies, such as hymns of praise to heaven, and commemoration of the ancestors, songs are used, but never on these occasions are female voices allowed.

A slave is far more marketable with musical talents than without. It is seldom, however, that women assist in any concerts whatever; the instrumental playing as well as the singing being almost alway wholly rendered by men.

Few travelers have heard a musical Chinese lady sing, and those who have enjoyed this rare event, say it is the most torturing of all Chinese music; from the nose and throat issue the most droning and hideous sounds and they seem to pile Ossa upon Pelion in the way of unnatural tones.

The natural voice of the Chinese is rather high; and very high tenors are not at all rare in the empire.

The voice in China is trained to much flexibility by the exigencies of the language, for the Chinese is, in one sense, the most musical of languages, as a word acquires half a dozen different significations according to the pitch of voice, or inflection with which it is pronounced.

The number of different words in the whole Chinese tongue does not exceed three hundred and fifty; all the additional ones are simply variations of these by lowering or raising the voice. This leads the foreigner into endless complications and misunderstandings; for example, the word tchu, pronounced clearly with the vowel of medium length, means "master, but by extending the vowel a trifle it signifies "hog"; it alsomeans "column" and "cookery.' —Elson's Curiosities of Music.

This is a story from Ceylon literature.

A king had a beautiful daughter whose one defect was that she could not be made to speak. Every means in his own power and that of the magicians failing—he offered her as a bride to any one who could make her talk. One day a handsome young prince appeared and was admitted. He possessed the singular gift of making inanimate objects converse. Before entering the princess' reception-room he stopped in the hall and thus addressed the lamp: "O Lamp! there was once a company of travelers met together at an inn. One was a carpenter, the next a painter, the third a cloth merchant, and the last a jeweler. The carpenter with his tools cut out of the floor a figure of a woman so beautiful that the painter could not resist—and he gave her the very colors of life—then the merchant covered her with his nicest stuffs, and, finally, the jeweler decorated her with his rarest jewels. Then came a hot discussion. To whom did she belong? They grew angrier and angrier. Now, O Lamp, which one was the rightful owner?" The lamp said one and then another, but the prince contradicted him every time, until their discussion was as furious as that of the four original disputants. The princess could stand it no longer—she must speak or explode. "You fools," she burst out "none of them owned her. She belonged to the inn-keeper, for wasn't she made out of his wood?" So the prince won her, and was never heard to complain of her silence, or even brevity.

This is an Englishman's idea of women: "A Frenchwoman will love her husband if he is witty or chivalrous; a German woman if he is constant and faithful; a Dutchwoman if he does not disturb her ease and comfort too much; a Spanish woman if he wreaks his vengeance on those who incur his displeasure; an Italian woman if he is dreamy and poetical; a Danish woman if he thinks her country the brightest and happiest on earth; a Russian woman if he despises all Westerners as miserable barbarians; an Englishwoman if he succeeds in ingratiating himself with the court and aristocracy; an American woman if he has plenty of money.

The delicacy of Lamartine's generosity is a thing to be admired. A poor broken-down man had applied to him for help—and had received it. In ouring the door to let him out Lamartine shivered in the cold wind. He turned quickly to the hatstand, and saying, "Monsieur, you have forgotten your overcoat," put one of his own upon the man's back, and bustled him off, without an opportunity for the remonstrance which would have been useless, or the gratitude which to him was embarrassing.

SUBJECTIVE AND DREAM MUSIC.

Some people fancy that Italian melodies are superior to German melodies because it is easier to remember and whistle them. But this is a very superficial test. A trained musical ear finds it just as easy to remember a Schubert song as a Bellini aria, and the Schubert song has the advantage of being harmonically as interesting as it is melodically, which is not the case with Bellini's music, which has disappeared from the stage because modern musicians crave more harmonic variety than he offers.

Did you ever try to recall, not only the melody but also the harmony and the instrumental colors of a piece of music—say the introduction to "Lohengrin"? There can be no doubt that Wagner, in his solitary study, could hear the music he wrote as perfectly as if an orchestra had been playing it to him; for only thus was he able in each case to choose those combinations of instruments which exactly corresponded to the mood he tried to express.

Many amateurs also have the power of recalling a complicated orchestra or vocal composition as distinctly as they an recall the sight of a landscape, with its green trees, blue sky, etc. The power of doing so can be acquired by practice, and a most delightful accomplishment it is when once mastered. For then one can enjoy operatic or concert selections whenever one pleases, and they are never marred by bad singing or slovenly playing.

This subjective music, as it might be called, has a charm even more exquisite than music actually heard. Those who have ever had the pleasure of dreaming of music, will be partially able to realize this truth; and everybody has heard the story of the famous Italian violinist who dreamed of hearing a sonata which he remembered and wrote down, and which proved to be his best composition. It is one of the most poetic touches in Wagner's "Meistersinger" that Walter dreams the song with which he wins the prize.

Shakespeare's insight into the function of music ranks him above all other poets. He knows that music "charmeth sleep," "killing care and grief of heart"; it "hath helped madmen to their wits," and "will make wise men mad." "I never heard so musical a discord, such sweet thunder," might be used as a text for a chapter on modern dramatic music.

Handwriting may often be a safe index to character yet as a rule, it cannot hold good. Byron's hand was a school-boy scrawl, Macaulay's an ungraceful sprawl. Keat's was clerky. Scott's utterly disappointing. Emerson wrote in sprawling and illegible characters. Fenimore Cooper and Dickens wrote in a notoriously bad style, while the Ettrick Shepherd's was called "vile." Horace Greeley's was unreadable to all but one compositor who had made it a specialty, and Napoleon's letters to Josephine were mistaken for maps of war operations. On the other hand, Wellington's writing was clear and noble Washington's firm and dignified, Cromwell's bold and steady, Henry VIII's determined, and Franklin's large and bold. Of literary men—that of Gray's was neat and regular, Leigh Hunt's graceful, Moore's easy, Shakespeare's as remarkable as his poetry, Poe's strikingly beautiful, Tennyson's classic, Longfellow's vigorous and poetic hooking. Holmes's graceful and quaint. Landor's bold and vigorous, Pitt's writing was flowing, Gladstone's is neat and regular. Lord Palmerston was a model of penmanship, and Chief-Justice Chase was celebrated for the beauty of his writing. Landor, in his "Imaginary Conversations," makes Aspasia say: "Men may be negligent of their hand-writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life; but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly."

One of the features of the fashionable dinners this season is the new dry wine ("Grand Vin Sec") of Louis Roederer. It is also the proper thing to serve it at the swell weddings.

If youth is the time to learn that is no proof that old age has not its power. Sophocles was an old man when he studied musical instruments; Cicero learned Greek at 80; Theophrastus began his famous "Characteristics of Men" at 90; Boccaccio never studied polite literature until past 35. Mondalesco wrote the memoirs of his own times at 115; Ogilby, who translated Homer and Virgil, knew little of Greek or Latin till past 50. All of these are cited by D'Israeli in his "Curiosities of Literature"; but others could be added, notably Wagner, whose latest work is often considered his greatest.

At a recent sale of autographs in Berlin, those known to be Richard Wagner's brought the highest prices. His Essay on Meyerbeer—lately found—in which he expresses great admiration for the composer, sold for 640 marks, and one of his own compositions brought 960 marks. Letters to Laube, Meyerbeer and others ranged from 70 to 120 marks. A fragment of Wagner's diary, kept while in Paris sold for 115 marks. Two of Chopin's polonaises went for 400 marks.

Plot of Tannhauser.

ACT I.—Grotto of Venus. Tannhauser, a minstrel knight, after securing a prize at a vocal contest, which won him at same time the love of Elisabeth, daughter of Landgrave of Thuringia, had mysteriously disappeared. As curtain rises we behold him in a mountain, entrapped by charms of Venus. Wild, unholy orgies of nymphs alternate with seductive songs of sirens. Tannhauser tired of these pleasures, longs to return to outer world. Venus begs and threatens in vain. He calls on Virgin Mary, the grotto disappears and he finds himself in a beautiful valley. A young shepherd sings a quaint song. Pilgrims march across stage and disappear. Landgrave and huntsmen arrive, find Tannhauser and beg him to return to the castle. He refuses, until Wolfram, his generous rival in song and love, begs him to return for Elisabeth's sake.

ACT II.—Elisabeth greets the returning knight. The Landgrave, suspecting her love and feeling sure of the winner, announces another vocal contest, promising his daughter's hand to the victor. Love is given out as subject of the contest. Wolfram and other knights sing of pure ideal love, but Tannhauser sings of worldly passion, and finally exclaims excitedly that he can only know real love who has been in the mountain of the heathen goddess. Great consternation. The women hurriedly leave, the knights draw their swords. But Elisabeth interposes, begs mercy for Tannhauser, and permission for him to join the Pilgrims and implore the Pope at Rome to forgive his sins.

ACT III.—Wolfram discovers Elisabeth kneeling before the cross awaiting Tannhauser's return. Pilgrims arrive, but he is not among them. After praying aloud, she leaves, refusing Wolfram's escort, who remains and sings his song to evening star. Suddenly he discovers Tannhauser in tattered clothes. In a highly dramatic monologue, he tells how the Pope refused him pardon, unless the dead staff in his hand should again get fresh leaves. In his despair he wishes to return to Venus, who is suddenly seen with her nymphs in a rosy twilight, while perfume and the magic music fill the air. Tannhauser seems lost, when once more Wolfram utters the magic word "Elisabeth," and the clear phantoms disappear. Procession, chanting funeral chorus, approaches, bearing Elisabeth on a bier. Tannhauser sinks down on coffin dead.

Persons desirous of procuring good reserved seats for the Fourth Symphonic Concert, Feb. 26th, when Hector Berlioz's "The Trojan in Carthage" will be performed, will find it to their advantage to secure them at an early date.

Box-office now open Chickering Hall.

It is said that Louis II, the late King of Bavaria, who was such a great patron of music, and such a firm friend of Wagner, once broke off his engagement with a certain princess, because she fell asleep during a performance of one of Wagner's operas,

THE OPERASEA SON.

The third season of German Opera at the Metropolitan Opera House will come to a close on Saturday, and the Directors believe that they merely echo public opinion in claiming that the artistic success of the performances has kept pace with the increase in the receipts at the box office from year to year.

Sixty-one performances have been given during this season of 15 weeks, including an extra evening performance of "Fidelio." Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" has had the largest number of performances, namely, 8; then came "Tannhäuser" with 6; the "Prophete," "Rienzi," "Merlin" and "Meistersinger" 5 each; "Walkûre," "Lohengrin," "Faust," "Aida," 4 each; "Golden Cross," "Fidelio," "Queen of Sheba," 3 each; "Masaniello," 2.

This list includes 3 operas and a ballet that had never before been produced in New York—"Tristan and Isolde," "Merlin," "The Golden Cross," and "Vienna Waltzes." The excellence of the artistic material which makes up the Metropolitan Company is attested by the fact that "Tristan and Isolde," which, a few years after its completion, had over fifty rehearsals at Vienna, and was then put aside on the ground that it was too difficult for performance, was here produced after a few weeks' rehearsing in a manner which, by the general consent of traveled amateurs, could be equalled only at Vienna today, while many declared the performances superior to those given at the Wagner Festival at Bayreuth last summer. It was the great popular success of this work that induced the management to defer the production of "Siegfried" to next season.

That the performances were not all of equal merit may be frankly conceded, but the management will make every effort to strengthen the casts for next season and to improve such weak points as may have revealed themselves. Besides "Siegfried" several other works, never before heard in New York, will be added to the repertory, in the effort to make it as varied as possible. Among the operas under consideration are Verdi's "Otello," and Weber's "Euryanthe," and possibly one of Spontini's operas.

The Metropolitan Opera House is perhaps the only institution of its kind that can look back to a season of four months, and say that the public has not once been deceived: that in every case the opera announced a week ahead has been actually sung on that date. In the "good old times" the New York public expected, as a matter of course, that "Il Trovatore" would be substituted at least once a week for another opera advertised, as well as for the novelties promised.

It is often said that republics do little for the fine arts, but in the Metropolitan Opera House New York possesses an institution which disproves this assertion. The experience of centuries has shown that there is no money in first-class operatic entertainments,—and in second class ones of course only so long as the

I. Akt.—Hohle im Venusberg. Der Ritter Tannhäuser war, nachdem er einen Sangerpreis und die Liebe der Elisabeth, Tochter des Landgrafen von Thüringen gewonnen, plotzlich verschwunden, und befindet sich nun im Venusberg. Endlich aber wird er dieser heidnischen Freuden überdrissig und bittet Venus ihn wieder auf die Erde zu lassen. Venus bittet ihn dagegen zu bleiben; er aber ruft die Jungfrau Maria an, und, in dem Augenblick verschwindet die Hohle und er befindet sich in einem schonen Thale. Ein junger Hirte blast ein Lied und Pilger marschiren vorbei. Der Landgraf mit seinem Jagern erscheint dann. Endet Tannhäuser, und bittet ihn ins Schloss zu kommen. Tannhauser zogert, bis Wolfram, sein edler Mitbewerber um die Gunst Elisabeth's, ihn bittet ihr zu Liebe zurückzukehren.

II. Akt.—Elisabeth begrüsst Tannhäuser. Der Landgraf kündigt ein neues Sängerfest an, und verspricht dem Sieger die Hand seiner Tochter. Gegenstand des Wettsingens ist die Liebe. Wolfram und andere Ritter singen von reiner idealer Liebe, aber Tannhäuser besingt die sinnliche Liebe und erklärt endlich dass nur der die Liebe kennt wer im Venusberg gewesen. Grosse Aufregung. Die Frauen verlassen den Saal und die Ritter ziehen ihre Schwerter. Elisabeth aber wirft sich dazwischen, und, auf ihr Bitten, erlaubt man dem Tannhauser mit den Pilgern nach Rom zu ziehen um des Papstes Gnade zu erflehen.

III. Akt.—Wolfram findet Elisabeth am Kreuze kniend. Tannhauser's Rückkehr erwartend. Die Pilger kommen zurück, er aber nicht dabei. Nachdem sie gebetet, lasst sie Wolfram zurück, der sein Lied an den Abendstern singt. Plotzlich endeckt er Tannhauser in zerrissenem Kleide. Tannhauser erzählt ihm (in dem berühmten Monologe) dass der Pabst ihm ebensowenig Verzeihung gewahren konne als der Stab in seiner Hand wieder grünen würde. In der Verzweiflung will er wieder in den Venusberg zurück. Wolfram hält ihn aber Venus erscheint mit ihren Nymphen, und sehon wähnt ihn Wolfram verloren als er noch einmal das Wort, "Elisabeth" ausspricht. Venus verschwindet. Leichenzug mit der entseelten Elisabeth. Tannhauser fallt todt auf den Sarg nieder.

public can be duped. To have first-class opera it is therefore necessary to make an opera house a centre of fashion as well as of music. Musicas Rubinstein has remarked, is an aristocratic art; and the opera has always been its most aristocratic form. Like the opera houses of Paris, Vienna, and Berlin, the Metropolitan was not built in order to make money, but to give America an institution which would be aristocratic in a social and an artistic sense at the same time. That this aim has been realized is the proud belief of the Directors.

"If the most exquisite orchestral music could be continued without a pause for a series of years, and children were brought up and educated in the room in which it was perpetually resounding, I believe their enjoyment of music, or understanding of it, would be very small."—Ruskin.

AN ARISTOCRATIC ART.

"Opera, whatever its merits and defects, is essentially a royal and an aristocratic entertainment. The drama was started by Thespis in a cart. The opera, on the other hand, was founded by popes, cardinals, and kings. The first operatic libretto, that of Poliziano's "Orfeo," was the work of Cardinal Riareo, nephew of Sixtus IV. Pope Clement IX. was the author of no less than seven libretti. The popes, indeed, used in former days to keep up an excellent theatre.—H. S. Edwards.

CHINESE SINGING.

The Chinese have in their classification of eight musical sounds utterly omitted to make any mention of the sound of the human voice. In all their great ceremonies, such as hymns of praise to heaven, and commemoration of the ancestors, songs are used, but never on these occasions are female voices allowed.

A slave is far more marketable with musical talents than without. It is seldom, however, that women assist in any concerts whatever; the instrumental playing as well as the singing being almost alway wholly rendered by men.

Few travelers have heard a musical Chinese lady sing, and those who have enjoyed this rare event, say it is the most torturing of all Chinese music; from the nose and throat issue the most droning and hideous sounds and they seem to pile Ossa upon Pelion in the way of unnatural tones.

The natural voice of the Chinese is rather high; and very high tenors are not at all rare in the empire.

The voice in China is trained to much flexibility by the exigencies of the language, for the Chinese is, in one sense, the most musical of languages, as a word acquires half a dozen different significations according to the pitch of voice, or inflection with which it is pronounced.

The number of different words in the whole Chinese tongue does not exceed three hundred and fifty; all the additional ones are simply variations of these by lowering or raising the voice. This leads the foreigner into endless complications and misunderstandings; for example, the word tchu, pronounced clearly with the vowel of medium length, means "master, but by extending the vowel a trifle it signifies "hog; it also means "column and "cookery.—Elton's Curiosities of Music.

This is a story from Ceylon literature.

A king had a beautiful daughter whose one detect was that she could not be made to speak. Every means in his own power and that of the magicians falling—he offered her as a bride to any one who could make her talk. One day a handsome young prince appeared and was admitted. He possessed the singular gift of making inanimate objects converse. Before entering the princess' reception-room he stopped in the hall and thus addressed the lamp: "O Lamp! there was once a company of travelers met together at an inn. One was a carpenter, the next a painter, the third a cloth merchant, and the last a jeweler. The carpenter with his tools cut out of the floor a figure of a woman so beautiful that the painter could not resist—and he gave her the very colors of life—then the merchant covered her with his nicest stuffs, and, finally, the jeweler decorated her with his rarest jewels. Then came a hot discussion. To whom did she belong? They grew angrier and angrier. Now, O Lamp, which one was the rightful owner?" The lamp said one and then another, but the prince contradicted him every time, until their discussion was as furious as that of the four original disputants. The princess could stand it no longer—she must speak or explode. "You fools," she burst out "none of them owned her. She belonged to the inn-keeper, for wasn't she made out of his wood?" So the prince won her, and was never heard to complain of her silence, or even brevity.

This is an Englishman's idea of women: "A Frenchwoman will love her husband if he is witty or chivalrous; a German woman if he is constant and faithful; a Dutchwoman if he does not disturb her ease and comfort too much; a Spanish woman if he wreaks his vengeance on those who incur his displeasure; an Italian woman if he is dreamy and poetical; a Danish woman if he thinks her country the brightest and happiest on earth; a Russian woman if he despises all Westerners as miserable barbarians; an Englishwoman if he succeeds in ingratiating himself with the court and aristocracy; an American woman if he has plenty of money.

"When I am in a crowded car and a lady comes in, I think it is the duty of some man to get up and give her his seat. I look around in the car to see if any man looks as if he were making a move in that direction; and when I see them all keep their seats, I hide my face behind my newspaper and blush for my sex."

SUBJECTIVE AND DREAM MUSIC.

Some people fancy that Italian melodies are superior to German melodies because it is easier to remember and whistle them. But this is a very superficial test. A trained musical ear finds it just as easy to remember a Schubert song as a Bellini aria, and the Schubert song has the advantage of being harmonically as interesting as it is melodically, which is not the case with Bellini's music, which has disappeared from the stage because modern musicians crave more harmonic variety than he offers.

Did you ever try to recall, not only the melody but also the harmony and the instrumental colors of a piece of music—say the introduction to "Lohengrin?" There can be no doubt that Wagner, in his solitary study, could hear the music he wrote as perfectly as if an orchestra had been playing it to him; for only thus was he able in each case to choose those combinations of instruments which exactly corresponded to the mood he tried to express.

Many amateurs also have the power of recalling a complicated orchestra or vocal composition as distinctly as they can recall the sight of a landscape, with its green trees, blue sky, etc. The power of doing so can be acquired by practice, and a most delightful accomplishment it is when once mastered. For then one can enjoy operatic or concert selections whenever one pleases, and they are never marred by bad singing or slovenly playing.

This subjective music, as it might be called, has a charm even more exquisite than music actually heard. Those who have ever had the pleasure of dreaming of music, will be partially able to realize this truth; and everybody has heard the story of the famous Italian violinist who dreamed of hearing a sonata which he remembered and wrote down, and which proved to be his best composition. It is one of the most poetic touches in Wagner's "Meistersinger" that Walter dreams the song with which he wins the prize.

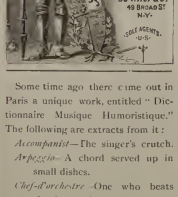
TO HAVE A GOOD DISPOSITION AND BE POPULAR YOU MUST BE FREE FROM DYSPEPSIA. ADAMS' Tutti Frutti Chewing Gum is good for Dyspepsia.



Some time ago there came out in Paris a unique work, entitled "Dictionnaire Musique Humoristique." The following are extracts from it:

Accompanist—The singer's crutch.

Arpeggio—A chord served up in small dishes.

Chef-d'orchestre—One who beats the time, or is beaten by it.

Counterpoint—An old contrivance for working up commonplace ideas. The "music of the future" of the fast.

Shout—A loud noise for which great singers are well paid, and small children well punished.

An adjective and its derivative adverb are often wide apart in application. For instance, the old illustration of the difference between a man constant in love, and a man constantly in love.

TO BE BEAUTIFUL YOU MUST HAVE PEARLY-WHITE TEETH. Adams' Tutti Frutti Chewing Gum beautifies the teeth and preserves them.

Handwriting may often be a safe index to character yet as a rule, it cannot hold good. Byron's hand was a school-boy scrawl, Macaulay's an ungraceful sprawl. Keat's was clerkly, Scott's utterly disappointing. Emerson wrote in sprawling and illegible characters. Fenimore Cooper and Dickens wrote in a notoriously bad style, while the Ettrick Shepherd's was called "vile." Horace Greeley's was unreadable to all but one compositor who had made it a specialty, and Napoleon's letters to Josephine were mistaken for maps of war operations. On the other hand, Wellington's writing was clear and noble Washington's firm and dignified, Cromwell's bold and steady, Henry VIII's determined, and Franklin's large and bold. Of literary men that of Gray's was neat and regular, Leigh Hunt's graceful, Moore's easy, Shakespeare's as remarkable as his poetry, Poe's strikingly beautiful, Tennyson's classic, Longfellow's vigorous and poetic looking, Holmes's graceful and quaint, Landor's bold and vigorous, Pitt's writing was flowing, Gladstone's is neat and regular, Lord Palmerston was a model of penmanship, and Chief-Justice Chase was celebrated for the beauty of his writing. Landor, in his "Imaginary Conversations," makes Aspasia say: "Men may be negligent of their hand-writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life; but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly."

One of the features of the fashionable dinners this season is the new dry wine ("Grand Vin Sec") of Louis Roederer. It is also the proper thing to serve it at the swell weddings.

Early in this century, an Edinborough manager, bringing out "King Lear," hit upon a greatly improved device for making "stage-thunder." He laid a cylindrical roof of parallel timbers across the stage behind the scene, and over these the carpenter was instructed to trundle a wheel-barrow full of nine-pound cannon-balls. The experiment worked with beautiful lurdiness, but unfortunately just as Lear before the scene had worked up to his climax, the carpenter tripped a timber and away went the thunder, following the declivity of the stage towards the front. The scene was powerless to oppose its progress, and quickly went down before the resistless fury of the storm, which next swept on towards the infirm old King inspiring him with an agility as graceful as it was sudden. Even the dignity of the musicians gave way, and they vaulted with their instruments into the parquet with various degrees of numbleness, to the accompaniment of crashing glass chimneys and thumping cannon-balls. And in the midst of all this confusion and devastation the author of all the trouble lay prone upon the back of the stage—frightened completely out of the ability to rise.

Argument

"MASANIELLO."

Act I.—An insurrection of Neapolitan sailors and fishermen against their Spanish rulers, about the middle of the seventeenth century, forms the historical basis of the opera. The hero is the fisherman Masaniello, whose sister, Fenella, has been betrayed by an unknown cavalier and subsequently dragged to prison by soldiers. The first scene is in the garden of the Spanish Viceroy, whose son Alfonso is rejoicing his marriage with Elvira. Fenella, having escaped from prison, is pursued by the soldiers, but throws herself at the feet of Elvira, interrupting the nuptial procession. From the soldiers Elvira does, were that the viceroy himself had imprisoned Fenella; and the dumb girl tells the story of her betrayal and flight in gesture language. Elvira promises her protection to Fenella and then proceeds to the chapel. As the bridal pair come out again Elvira takes her protege to intercession, and the confession of Fenella, that he is the betrayer of the dumb girl.

Act II.—A fisherman's camp at Portici. Masaniello's friend Pietro, who has been sent to seek Fenella, returns and reports that he could not find her, but presently Fenella appears and tells her sad story to her brother in her gesture language. Masaniello and his followers resolve on revenge, and organize a rebellion against the tyranny of the Spanish viceroy.

Act III.—Elvira having pardoned her husband's crime, asks him to send for Fenella and take care of her. The soldiers find her in a Neapolitan market place and carry her off, after Masaniello, who suddenly appeared, had threatened violence with his dagger. The act closes with the famous prayer and the insurrection begins

Act IV.—Masaniello's Hut. Masaniello deplores the horrors of the insurrection when Fenella enters, endeavors to describe some of the scenes she has witnessed and then sinks down exhausted. Pietro appears and reminds them Alfonso shall be executed. He has hardly left when Alfonso and Elvira appear as fugitives and appeal to Fenella for protection. She recognizes Alfonso, and her first impulse is to deliver him up to the fishermen; but pity prevails, and, Masaniello appearing, they are reconciled to their safety. Notwithstanding the remonstrances of the followers, he sends them in a boat to a castle. The keys of the city are now delivered to Masaniello, as well as the royal insignia. As he mounts his charger and rides away, Pietro and the conspirators vow vengeance on him for having allowed Alfonso to escape.

Act V.—Pietro makes an attempt to poison Masaniello, who however, recovers and leads the army against the forces of Alfonso which are advancing to recapture the city, while the supersti- tious populace act, terrified by the growlings and eruptions of Vesuvius. Elvira appears before Fenella and tells of an attack made on her by the conspirators, and her rescue through the intervention of Masaniello. Alfonso now joins them. The population, he relates, famous at their previous conduct of Masaniello in allowing Elvira to escape, overcome, assassinated him. Fenella, maddened by the blow, hurries to the background and leaps into the sea.

C. P. À LA SIRÈNE

ORIENTAL.
Who, when the silent wrinkle steals
On brow and cheek, its ravage hides?
Who but tisserand?

A young composer once wrote to Rossini, asking his advice as to the best method of composing an overture. Here is a portion of the answer: "Wait till the evening before the first performance, for nothing excites inspiration like necessity, the presence of a copyist waiting for your work, and the view of a manager in despair tearing out his hair by handfuls. In Italy, in my time, all the managers were bald at thirty.

"I composed the Overture to "Othello" in a small room in the Barbaja Palace where the hallest and most ferocious of managers had shut me up by force with nothing but a dish of macaroni and the library that I should not leave the place alive, until I had written the last note. I wrote the Overture to "Gazza Ladra" on the day of the first performance, in an upper loft of the Scala, where I had been confined by the manager under the guard of four scene-shifters, who had orders to throw my text out of the window but to let the copyists who were waiting below to transcribe it. In default of the music I was to be thrown myself. Tancredi I did better. I composed no Overture but tacked on one intended for a very serious work by Mme. Gallenetta. The public were delighted. I composed the Overture to Count Ory, while angling with my feet in the water and in the company of M. Aguado, who was talking Spanish finance all the time. That of "Guillaume Tell" was written under some what similar circumstances," etc. This may be very well for a Rossini, but would he rather a dangerous experiment to recommen das general advice.

THE COMIC IN MUSIC.

Gounod's "Funeral March, for a Marionette," is a graceful, melodious piece of music, in which there is nothing comic, but the title. No one would find it in the slightest degree amusing, but for the description of the incident it is supposed to illustrate, which is usually printed in the programmes of concerts where the said funeral march is to be performed.

In the old-fashioned Italian operas of the buffo type there are plenty of chattering songs in which the humor, such as it is, consists in the words being uttered so rapidly that any greater rapidity of utterance would seem to be impossible. Here some little amusement may be caused by witnessing the efforts of the buffo singer or singers—for there are often two or three of them chattering at once—to overcome such difficulties as have been deliberately put forward for that purpose by the composer. If this, however, be humor, it is humor of a very mean order, on a par with that of "Peter Piper picked a peck of pepper," and other verbal devices for testing the power of a speaker to speak rapidly, and at the same time distinctly.

Much that is considered comic in music possesses the same sort of drollery that belongs in comic writings to grammatical errors, or to mistakes in spelling. Romberg's "Toy Symphony," in which, with the usual orchestral basis, solo instruments of a burlesque character, such as the rattle, the penny trumpet, the child's drum, and so on, are from time to time introduced, is surprisingly funny. But with the first feeling of surprise the fun also vanishes; for the humor in this, as in all other toy symphonies, consists only in giving good music to bad instruments. If Romberg's symphony were played throughout with instruments of the best make in the parts written for the toys, no one not previously acquainted with the work would imagine for a moment that it was intended to be amusing.

In Mozart's "Musical Joke" again, the joke consists in the instruments coming in at wrong places, executing inappropriate phrases, and playing out of tune. Edwards's Life of Kossini.

ROSSINI'S "CHESTNUT."

Rossini's favorite joke was in regard to his age. He was born on February 29, 1792; and the circumstance of his having come into the world in a leap year justified him, he used to claim, in counting his birthday, not annually, according to the usual custom, but once every four years. According to this method of computation he had numbered nineteen birthdays when, at the age of seventy-seven, he died. Rossini was born in the very year that Mozart died. He was a composer of extraordinary activity, as shown by the fact that by the time he was thirty-seven he had written thirty-seven operas; while, during the period of his greatest fertility, he frequently produced as many as four operas in one year and more than once he completed an opera within a fortnight.

I. Act.—Alfonso, Sohn des Vice-König, feiert seine Hochzeit mit Elvira, als Fenella, die Schwester des Fischers Masaniello von Soldaten verfolgt, hereinstürzt. Sie ist stumm, aber die Soldaten theilen Elvira mit dass der Vice-König das Mädchen ins Gefängniss geworfen hatte, woraus sie nun entflohen. Elvira verspricht ihr Schutz und begibt sich in die Kapelle. Als das Brautpaar heraus kommt, endeckt Elvira dass ihr eigener Bräutigam der Verführer des Mädchens war.

II. Act.—Pietro, den Masaniello ausgeschickt hatte um seine Schwester zu suchen, kehrt ohne dieselbe gefunden zu haben zurück. Bald aber erscheint sie und erzählt ihrem Bruder ihr Schicksal durch ihre Gebärdensprache. Masaniello schwort Rache, und stiftet eine Revolution an.

III. Akt.—Elvira hat ihrem Genal verziehen, und wünscht mit Fenella in Schutz zu nehmen. Sie wird von den Soldaten auf dem Marktplatz gefunden, und fortgeschleppt, als eben Masaniello erscheint und mit dem Dolche droht. Masaniello's Gebet. Der Aufstand beginnt.

IV. Akt.—Masaniello's Hütte. Fenella erscheint und versucht den Aufruhr zu schildern. Pietro verangt man solle Alonso todten. Kaum ist er fort als Alfonso und Elvira als Flehthuige erscheinen. Masaniello verspricht ihnen Schutz und schickt sie auf einen Wagen ins Schloss. Die Stadt schlüssel werden dem Masaniello nun ausgeliefert. Nachdem er weggerritten, schworen Pietro und seine Begleiter Rache für Alfonso's Rettung.

V. Akt.—Alfonso hat wieder sein Heer gesammelt und Masaniello fuhrt seine Truppen gegen ihn ins Feld, wurend die Einwohner durch die Ausbrüche des Vesuves bestürzt sind. Elvira erscheint und erzählt der Fencia dass Masaniello sie wiedergerettet, und dass das Volk ihn zur Strafe dafür getodtet habe. Fenella wirft sich in den Abgrund hinab.

At a recent sale of autographs in Berlin, those known to be Richard Wagner's brought the highest prices. His Essay on Meyerbeer—lately found—in which he expresses great admiration for the composer, sold for 640 marks, and one of his own compositions brought 960 marks. Letters to Laube, Meyerbeer and others ranged from 70 to 120 marks. A fragment of Wagner's diary, kept while in Paris sold for 115 marks. Two of Chopin's polonaises went for 400 marks.

It is said that Louis II., the late King of Bavaria, who was such a great patron of music, and such a firm friend of Wagner, once broke off his engagement with a certain princess because she fell asleep during a performance of one of Wagner's operas.

AN ARISTOCRATIC ART.

"Opera, whatever its merits and defects, is essentially a royal and an aristocratic entertainment. The drama was started by Thespis in a cart. The opera, on the other hand, was founded by popes, cardinals, and kings. The first operatic libretto, that of Poliziano's "Orfeo," was the work of Cardinal Riareo, nephew of Sixtus IV. Pope Clement IX. was the author of no less than seven librettis. The popes, indeed, used in former days to keep up an excellent theatre."—H. S. Edwards.

CHINESE SINGING.

The Chinese have in their classification of eight musical sounds utterly omitted to make any mention of the sound of the human voice. In all their great ceremonies, such as hymns of praise to heaven, and commemoration of the ancestors, songs are used, but never on these occasions are female voices allowed.

A slave is far more marketable with musical talents than without. It is seldom, however, that women assist in any concerts whatever; the instrumental playing as well as the singing being almost alway wholly rendered by men,

Few travelers have heard a musical Chinese lady sing, and those who have enjoyed this rare event, say it is the most torturing of all Chinese music; from the nose and throat issue the most droning and hideous sounds and they seem to pile Ossa upon Pelion in the way of unnatural tones.

The natural voice of the Chinese is rather high; and very high tenors are not at all rare in the empire.

The voice in China is trained to much flexibility by the exigencies of the language, for the Chinese is, in one sense, the most musical of languages, as a word acquires half a dozen different significations according to the pitch of voice, or inflection with which it is pronounced.

The number of different words in the whole Chinese tongue does not exceed three hundred and fifty; all the additional ones are simply variations of these by lowering or raising the voice. This leads the foreigner into endless complications and misunderstandings; for example, the word ichu, pronounced clearly with the vowel of medium length, means "master," but by extending the vowel a trifle it signifies "hog:" it also means "column" and "cookery."—Elson' Curiosities of Music.

This is a story from Ceylon literature.

A king had a beautiful daughter whose one detect was that she could not be made to speak. Every means in his own power and that of the magicians failing—he offered her as a bride to any one who could make her talk. One day a handsome young prince appeared and was admitted. He possessed the singular gift of making inanimate objects converse. Before entering the princess' reception-room he stopped in the hall and thus addressed the lamp: "O Lamp! there was once a company of travelers met together at an inn. One was a carpenter, the next a painter, the third a cloth merchant, and the last a jeweler. The carpenter with his tools cut out of the floor a figure of a woman so beautiful that the painter could not resist—and he gave her the very colors of life—then the merchant covered her with his nicest stuffs, and, finally, the jeweler decorated her with his rarest jewels. Then came a hot discussion. To whom did she belong? They grew angrier and angrier. Now, O Lamp, which one was the rightful owner?" The lamp said one and then another, but the prince contradicted him every time, until their discussion was as furious as that of the four original disputants. The princess could stand it no longer—she must speak or explode. "You fools," she burst out "none of them owned her. She belonged to the inn-keeper, for wasn't she made out of his wood?" So the prince won her, and was never heard to complain of her silence, or even brevity.

This is an Englishman's idea of women: "A Frenchwoman will love her husband if he is witty or chivalrous; a German woman if he is constant and faithful; a Dutchwoman if he does not disturb her ease and comfort too much; a Spanish woman if he wreaks his vengeance on those who incur his displeasure; an Italian woman if he is dreamy and poetical; a Danish woman if he thinks her country the brightest and happiest on earth; a Russian woman if he despises all Westerners as miserable barbarians; an Englishwoman if he succeeds in ingratiating himself with the court and aristocracy; an American woman if he has plenty of money.

"When I am in a crowded car and a lady comes in, I think it is the duty of some man to get up and give her his seat. I look around in the car to see if any man looks as if he were making a move in that direction; and when I see them all keep their seats, I hide my face behind my newspaper and blush for my sex."

A young composer once wrote to Rossini, asking his advice as to the best method of composing an overture. Here is a portion of the answer: "Wait till the evening before the first performance, for nothing excites inspiration like necessity, the presence of a copyist waiting for your work, and the view of a manager in despair tearing out his hair by handfuls. In Italy, in my time, all the managers were bald at thirty.

"I composed the Overture to "Othello" in a small room in the Barbaja Palace where the haldest and most ferocious of managers had shut me up by force, with nothing but a dish of macaroni and the threat that I should not leave the place alive, until I had written the last note. I wrote the Overture to "Gazza Ladra" on the day of the first performance, in an upper loft of the Scala, where I had been confined by the manager under the guard of four scene-shifters, who had orders to throw my text out of the window bit by bit to the copyists who were waiting below to transcribe it. In default of the music I was to be thrown out. For Barbiere I did better. I composed no Overture but tacked on one intended for a very serious work called Elizabetta. The public were delighted. I composed the Overture to Count Ory, while angling, with my feet in the water and in the company of M. Aguado, who was talking Spanish finance all the time. That of "Gillaume Tell" was written under some what similar circumstances," etc. This may be very well for a Rossini, but would be rather a dangerous experiment to recommen das general advice.

Shakespeare's insight into the function of music ranks him above all other poets. He knows that music "charmeth sleep," "killing care and grief of heart"; it "hath helped madmen to their wits," and "will make wise men mad." "I never heard so musical a discord, such sweet thunder," might be used as a text for a chapter on modern dramatic music.

SUBJECTIVE AND DREAM MUSIC.

Some people fancy that Italian melodies are superior to German melodies because it is easier to remember and whistle them. But this is a very superficial test. A trained musical ear finds it just as easy to remember a Schubert song as a Bellini aria, and the Schubert song has the advantage of being harmonically as interesting as it is melodically, which is not the case with Bellini's music, which has disappeared from the stage because modern musicians crave more harmonic variety than he offers.

Some time ago there came out in Paris a unique work, entitled "Dictionnaire Musique-Humoristique." The following are extracts from it:

Accompanist—The singer's crutch.

Arpeggio—A chord served up in small dishes.

Chef-d'orchestre—One who beats the time, or is beaten by it.

Counterpoint—An old contrivance for working up commonplace ideas. The "music of the future" of the fast.

Shout—A loud noise for which great singers are well paid, and small children well punished.

An adjective and its derivative adverb are often wide apart in application. For instance, the old illustration of the difference between a man constant in love, and a man constantly in love.

TO BE BEAUTIFUL YOU MUST HAVE PEARLY-WHITE TEETH. Adams' Tutti Frutti Chewing Gum beautifies the teeth and preserves them.

Did you ever try to recall, not only the melody but also the harmony and the instrumental colors of a piece of music—say the introduction to "Lohengrin?" There can be no doubt that Wagner, in his solitary study, could hear the music he wrote as perfectly as if an orchestra had been playing it to him; for only thus was he able in each case to choose those combinations of instruments which exactly corresponded to the mood he tried to express.

Many amateurs also have the power of recalling a complicated orchestral or vocal composition as distinctly as they can recall the sight of a landscape, with its green trees, blue sky, etc. The power of doing so can be acquired by practice, and a most delightful accomplishment it is when once mastered. Further one can enjoy operatic or concert selections whenever one pleases, and they are never marred by bad singing or slovenly playing.

This subjective music, as it might be called, has a charm even more exquisite than music actually heard. Those who have ever had the pleasure of dreaming of music, will be partially able to realize this truth; and everybody has heard the story of the famous Italian violinist who dreamed of hearing a sonata which he remembered and wrote down, and which proved to be his best composition. It is one of the most poetic touches in Wagner's "Meistersinger" that Walter dreams the song with which he wins the prize,

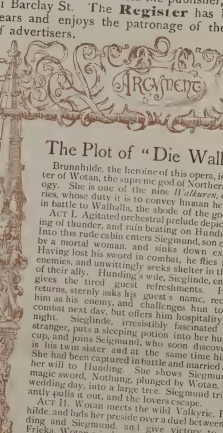
Who but Guraud?



The Plot of "Die Walkure."

Brunnhilde, the heroine of this opera, is a daughter of Wotan, the supreme god of Northern mythology. She is one of the nine Walkuren or Valkyries, whose duty it is to convey human heroes slain in battle to Walhalla, the abode of the gods.

Act I. Agitated orchestral prelude depicts growling of thunder, and rain beating on Hunding's hut. Into this rude cabin enters Siegmund, son of Wotan. Having lost his sword in combat, he flies from his enemies, and unmarked seeks shelter in the home of their ally. Hunding's wife, Sieglinde, enters and gives the tired guest refreshments. Hunding returns, sternly asks his guest's name, recognizes him as his enemy, and challenges him to mortal combat next day, but offers him hospitality for the night. Sieglinde irresistibly fascinated by the stranger, puts a sleeping potion into her husband's cup, and joins Seigmund, who soon discovers she is his twin sister and at the same time his love. She had been captured in infantile and married against her will to Hunding. She shows Siegmund the magic sword, Nothung, plunged by Wotan on her wedding day, into a large tree. Siegmund triumphantly pulls it out, and the lovers escape.

Act II. Wotan meets the wild Valkyrie, Brunnhilde, and bids her pursue over a duel between Hunding and Siegmund, and give victory to latter. Frieka, Wotan's jealous wife, demands the death of the guilty Siegmund, and Wotan sadly revokes the order just given to Brunnhilde. She protests, but the threatens her with his wrath. Amid wonderful agitated music, Siegmund and Sieglinde appear, pursued by Hunding, whose horn is heard. Brunnhilde comes and tells Siegmund he must die and go to Walhalla. He refuses to be parted from his love, and Brunnhilde, moved by pity, promises to protect him, despite Wotan's orders. Duel on the rocks. Brunnhilde protects Seegmund, but in vain. Wotan appears and shatters magic sword.

Act III. Ride of the wild Valkyries. Brunnhilde joins them, pursued by Wotan. They piteously implore him to forgive her, but in vain. For her disobedience she is condemned to be put into a magnetic sleep, until a hero shall come to wake her and claim her as his wife, a goddess no longer. Wotan's sad farewell. Magic fire encircles the rock to protect her.

Handwriting may often be a safe index to character yet as a rule, it cannot hold good. Byron's hand was a school-boy scrawl, Macaulay's an ungraceful sprawl. Keat's was clerky. Scott's utterly disappointing. Emerson wrote in sprawling and illegible characters. Fenimore Cooper and Dickens wrote in a notoriously bad style, while the Ettrick Shepherd's was called "vile." Horace Greeley's was unreadable to all but one compositor who had made it a specialty, and Napoleon's letters to Josephine were mistaken for maps of war operations. On the other hand, Wellington's writing was clear and noble. Washington's firm and dignified. Cromwell's bold and steady. Henry VIII's determined, and Franklin's large and bold. Of literary men—that of Gray's was neat and regular. Leigh Hunt's graceful, Moore's easy. Shakespeare's as remarkable as his poetry. Poe's strikingly beautiful. Tennyson's classic, Longfellow's vigorous and poetic looking; Holmes's graceful and quaint. Landor's bold and vigorous. Pitt's writing was flowing, Gladstone's is neat and regular. Lord Palmerston was a model of penmanship, and Chief-Justice Chase was celebrated for the beauty of his writing. Landor, in his "Imaginary Conversations," makes Aspasia say: "Men may be negligent of their hand-writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life; but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly."

THE COMIC IN MUSIC.

Gounod's "Funeral March, for a Marionette," is a graceful, melodious piece of music, in which there is nothing comic, but the title. No one would find it in the slightest degree amusing, but for the description of the incident it is supposed to illustrate, which is usually printed in the programmes of concerts where the said funeral march is to be performed.

In the old-fashioned Italian operas of the buffo type there are plenty of chattering songs in which the humor, such as it is, consists in the words being uttered so rapidly that any greater rapidity of utterance would seem to be impossible. Here some little amusement may be caused by witnessing the efforts of the buffo singer or singers—for there are often two or three of them chattering at once—to overcome such difficulties as have been deliberately put forward for that purpose by the composer. If this, however, be humor, it is humor of a very mean order, on a par with that of "Peter Piper picked a peck of pepper," and other verbal devices for testing the power of a speaker to speak rapidly, and at the same time distinctly.

Much that is considered comic in music possesses the same sort of drollery that belongs in comic writings to grammatical errors, or to mistakes in spelling. Romberg's "Toy Symphony," in which, with the usual orchestral basis, solo instruments of a burlesque character, such as the rattle, the penny trumpet, the child's drum and so on, are from time to time introduced, is surprisingly funny. But with the first feeling of surprise the fun also vanishes; for the humor in this, as in all other toy symphonies, consists only in giving good music to bad instruments. If Romberg's symphony were played throughout with instruments of the best make in the parts written for the toys, no one not previously acquainted with the work would imagine for a moment that it was intended to be amusing.

In Mozart's "Musical Joke" again, the joke consists in the instruments coming in at wrong places, executing inappropriate phrases, and playing out of tune.—Edwards' Life of Rossini.

ROSSINI'S "CHESTNUT."

Rossini's favorite joke was in regard to his age. He was born on February 29, 1792; and the circumstance of his having come into the world in a leap year justified him, he used to claim, in counting his birthday, not annually, according to the usual custom, but once every four years. According to this method of computation he had numbered nineteen birthdays when, at the age of seventy-seven, he died. Rossini was born in the very year that Mozart died. He was a composer of extraordinary activity, as shown by the fact that by the time he was thirty-seven he had written thirty-seven operas; while, during the period of his greatest fertility, he frequently produced as many as four operas in one year, and more than once he completed an opera within a fortnight.

"Die Walküre."

Brünnhilde ist die Tochter Wotan's, des höchsten Gottes der nordischen Mythologie. Sie ist einer der Walküren, deren Pflicht es ist, die Seelen gefallener Helden nach Walhalla zu führen.

I AKT.—Siegmund, ein Sohn Wotan's und ein Sterblicher, hat im Kampfe sein Schwert verloren und flieht nun vor seinen Feinden. In Hundie tritt er, ohne es zu ahnen, in die Hütte seines Feindes Hunding, und sinkt am Herdfeuer nieder. Sieglinde, Hunding's Weib, erscheint und bietet dem Speise und Trank. Hunding kehrt zurück, erkennt seinen Gast und fordert ihn zum Kampf auf den Morgen. Sieglinde mischt einen Schlaftrunk in Hunding's Becher, und kehrt, nachdem er schläft, zu Siegmund zurück. Siegmund erkennt in ihr alsbald seine Geliebte und Zwillingsschwester. Man hatte sie getrennt und gegen ihren Willen an Hunding verheirathet. Sie erzählt Siegmund von dem Schwert das Wotan an ihrem Hochzeitstag in den grossen Baum gestossen hatte. Siegmund zieht es heraus, mit übermenschlicher Kraft, und entflieht mit Sieglinde.

II AKT.—Hunding verfolgt die Flüchtigen. Wotan trifft Brünnhilde und befiehlt ihr in dem Zweikampf den Siegmund zu helfen. Aber Fricka, Wotan's Gattin, verlangt den Tod Siegfried-brechenden Siegmund, und Wotan befiehlt nun Brünnhilde Siegmund nicht zu helfen. Man hört Hunding's Horn, und die Flüchtigen erscheinen auf der Bühne. Brünnhilde kündigt dem Siegmund an, er müsse sterben; er aber will sich nicht von Sieglinde trennen, bis Brünnhilde verspricht ihn vor dem Tode zu schützen. Zweikampf in den von Wolken umhüllten Gebirge. Brünnhilde hilft Siegmund, aber umsonst; denn Wotan erscheint und zerschlagt sein Schwert.

III AKT.—Ritt der Walküren, die sich auf einem Felsen sammeln. Brünnhilde kommt zu ihnen, von Wotan verfolgt. Die Walküren bitten für sie, aber Wotan bestraft sie für ihren Ungehorsam, indem er sie in einen tiefen, magnetischen Schlaf versenkt. Wotan's Abschied. Feuerzauber.

At a recent sale of autographs in Berlin, those known to be Richard Wagner's brought the highest prices. His Essay on Meyerbeer—lately found—is which he expresses great admiration for the composer, sold for 640 marks, and one of his own compositions brought 960 marks. Letters to Laube, Meyerbeer and others ranged from 70 to 120 marks. A fragment of Wagner's diary, kept while in Paris sold for 115 marks. Two of Chopin's polonaises went for 400 marks.

It is said that Louis II. the late King of Bavaria, who was such a great patron of music, and such a firm friend of Wagner, once broke off his engagement with a certain princess, because she fell asleep during a performance of one of Wagner's operas.

AN ARISTOCRATIC ART.

"Opera, whatever its merits and defects, is essentially a royal and an aristocratic entertainment. The drama was started by Thespis in a cart. The opera, on the other hand, was founded by popes, cardinals, and kings. The first operatic libretto, that of Poliziano's "Orfeo," was the work of Cardinal Riareo, nephew of Sixtus IV. Pope Clement IX. was the author of no less than seven libretti. The popes, indeed, used in former days to keep up an excellent theatre."—H. S. Edwards.

CHINESE SINGING.

The Chinese have in their classification of eight musical sounds utterly omitted to make any mention of the sound of the human voice. In all their great ceremonies, such as hymns of praise to heaven, and commemoration of the ancestors, songs are used, but never on these occasions are female voices allowed.

A slave is far more marketable with musical talents than without. It is seldom, however, that women assist in any concerts whatever; the instrumental playing as well as the singing being almost alway wholly rendered by men.

Few travelers have heard a musical Chinese lady sing, and those who have enjoyed this rare cvent, say it is the most torturing of all Chinese music; from the nose and throat issue the most droning and hideous sounds and they seem to pile Ossa upon Pelion in the way of unnatural tones.

The natural voice of the Chinese is rather high; and very high tenors are not at all rare in the empire.

The voice in China is trained to much flexibility by the exigencies of the language, for the Chinese is, in one sense, the most musical of languages, as a word acquires half a dozen different significations according to the pitch of voice, or inflection with which it is pronounced.

The number of different words in the whole Chinese tongue does not exceed three hundred and fifty; all the additional ones are simply variations of these by lowering or raising the voice. This leads the foreigner into endless complications and misunderstandings; for example, the word tchu, pronounced clearly with the vowel of medium length, means "master," but by extending the vowel a trifle it signifies "hog;" it also means "column" and "cookery."—Elson's Curiosities of Music.

This is a story from Ceylon literature.

A king had a beautiful daughter whose one detect was that she could not be made to speak. Every means in his own power and that of the magicians failing—he offered her as a bride to any one who could make her talk. One day a handsome young prince appeared and was admitted. He possessed the singular gift of making inanimate objects converse. Before entering the princess' receptoon-room he stopped in the hall and thus addressed the lamp: "O Lamp! there was once a company of travelers met together at an inn. One was a carpenter, the next a painter, the third a cloth merchant, and the last a jeweler. The carpenter with his tools cut out of the floor a figure of a woman so beautiful that the painter could not resist—and he gave her the very colors of life—then the merchant covered her with his nicest stuffs, and, finally, the jewcler decorated her with his rarest jcwels. Then came a hot discussion. To whom did she belong? They grew angrier and angrier. Now, O Lamp, which one was the rightful owner?" The lamp said one and then another, but the prince contradicted him every time, until their discussion was as furious as that of the four original disputants. The princess could stand it no longer—she must speak or explode. "You fools," she burst out "none of them owned her. She belonged to the inn-keeper, for wasn't she made out of his wood?" So the prince won her, and was never heard to complain of her silence, or even brevity.

This is an Englishman's idea of women: "A Frenchwoman will love her husband if he is witty or chivalrous; a German woman if he is constant and faithful; a Dutchwoman if he does not disturb her ease and comfort too much; a Spanish woman if he wreaks his vengeance on those who incur his displeasure; an Italian woman if he is dreamy and poetical; a Danish woman if he thinks her country the brightest and happiest on earth; a Russian woman if he despises all Westerners as miserable barbarians; an Englishwoman if he succeeds in ingratiating himself with the court and aristocracy; an American woman if he has plenty of money.

It is often interesting to notice the criticisms which greet the first appearance of a composition. Just after the first performance of Rubinstein's Ocean Symphony, which will shortly be given by the Symphony Society, the following criticism was given: "The music of this new symphony is dramatic rather than symphonic. The means employed are neither extravagant, nor too realistic, the composer is happily content to depict a moderate tempest. The orchestra is treated in a masterly manner, the scoring in some respects resembles Weber." Shortly before this a New York journal had sweepingly asserted that Rubinstein was a very great performer, and an equally bad composer!

So, too, when the "Flying Dutchman" was brought out, it called forth the following: "It is one of the most melodious and expressive compositions as yet submitted to the public by Wagner. It is second as an effort of genius, to Lohengrin. Another melody recently written to French words, 'Berceuse,' has met with a legitimate success. It is full of freshness and grace, and must have been conceived by the author of 'Die Meistersinger' in a moment of agreeable distraction. It might be mistaken for Mendelssohn or Schubert!"

"When I am in a crowded car and a lady comes in, I think it is the duty of some man to get up and give her his seat. I look around in the car to see if any man looks as if he were making a move in that direction; and when I see them all keep their seats, I hide my face behind my newspaper and blush for my sex."

A young composer once wrote to Rossini, asking his advice as to the best method of composing an overture. Here is a portion of the answer: "Wait till the evening before the first performance, for nothing excites inspiration like necessity, the presence of a copyist waiting for your work, and the view of a manager in despair tearing out his hair by handfuls. In Italy, in my time, all the managers were bald at thirty.

"I composed the Overture to "Othello" in a small room in the Barbaja Palace where the baldest and most ferocious of managers had shut me up by force, with nothing but a dish of macaroni and the threat that I should not leave the place alive, until I had written the last note. I wrote the Overture to "Gazza Ladra" on the day of the first performance, in an upper loft of the Scala, where I had been confined by the manager under the guard of four scene-shifters, who had orders to throw my text out of the window bit by bit to the copyists who were waiting below to transcribe it. In default of the music I was to be thrown out. For Barbiere I did better. I composed no Overture but tacked on one intended for a very serious work called Elizabetta. The public were delighted. I composed the Overture to Count Ory, while angling, with my feet in the water and in the company of M. Aguado, who was talking Spanish finance all the time. That of "Gillaume Tell" was written under some what similar circumstances," etc. This may be very well for a Rossini, but would be rather a dangerous experiment to recommen das general advice.

Shakespeare's insight into the function of music ranks him above all other poets. He knows that music "charmeth sleep," "killing care and grief of heart"; it "hath helped madmen to their wits," and "will make wise men mad." "I never heard so musical a discord, such sweet thunder," might be used as a text for a chapter on modern dramatic music.

Some time ago there come out in Paris a unique work, entitled "Dictionnaire Musique-Humoristique." The following are extracts from it:

Accompanist—The singer's crutch.

Arpeggio—A chord served up in small dishes.

Chef-d'orchestre—One who beats the time, or is beaten by it.

Counterpoint—An old contrivance for working up commonplace ideas. The "music of the future" of the fast.

Shout—A loud noise for which great singers are well paid, and small children well punished.

An adjective and its derivative adverb are often wide apart in application. For instance, the old illustration of the difference between a man constant in love, and a man constantly in love

TO BE BEAUTIFUL YOU MUST HAVE PEARLY-WHITE TEETH. Adams' Tutti Frutti Chewing Gum Lustrifies the teeth and preserves them.

SUBJECTIVE AND DREAM MUSIC.

Some people fancy that Italian melodies are superior to German melodies because it is easier to remember and whistle them. But this is a very superficial test. A trained musical ear finds it just as easy to remember a Schubert song as a Bellini aria, and the Schubert song has the advantage of being harmonically as interesting as it is melodically, which is not the case with Bellini's music, which has disappeared from the stage because modern musicians crave more harmonic variety than he offers.

Did you ever try to recall, not only the melody but also the harmony and the instrumental colors of a piece of music—say the introduction to "Lohengrin"? There can be no doubt that Wagner, in his solitary study, could hear the music he wrote as perfectly as if an orchestra had been playing it to him; for only thus was he able in each case to choose those combinations of instruments which exactly corresponded to the mood he tried to express.

Many amateurs also have the power of recalling a complicated orchestra or vocal composition as distinctly as they can recall the sight of a landscape, with its green trees, blue sky, etc. The power of doing so can be acquired by practice, and a most delightful accomplishment it is when once mastered. Forthen one can enjoy operatic or concert selections whenever one pleases, and they are never marred by bad singing or slovenly playing.

This subjective music, as it might be called, has a charm even more exquisite than music actually heard. Those who have ever had the pleasure of dreaming of music, will be partially able to realize this truth; and everybody has heard the story of the famous Italian violinist who dreamed of hearing a sonata which he remembered and wrote down, and which proved to be his best composition. It is one of the most poetic touches in Wagner's "Meistersinger" that Walter dreams the song with which he wins the prize,

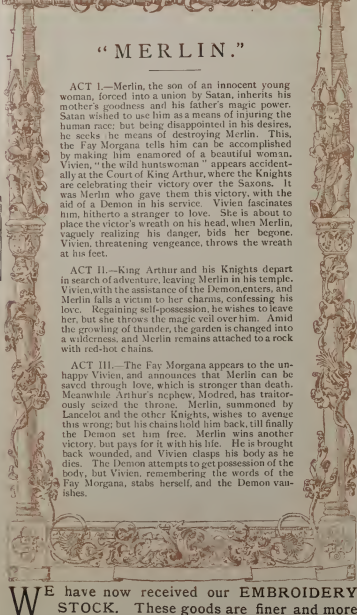
One of the features of the fashionable dinners this season is the new dry wine ("Grand Vin Sec") of Louis Roederer. It is also the proper thing to serve it at the swell weddings.

Early in this century, an Edinborough manager, bringing out "King Lear," hit upon a greatly improved device for making "stage-thunder." He laid a "corduroy" road of parallel timbers across the stage behind the scene, and over these the carpenter was instructed to trundle a wheel-barrow full of nine-pound cannon-balls. The experiment worked with beautiful success, but unfortunately, just as Lear before the scene had worked up to his climax, the carpenter tripped a timber and away went the thunder, following the declivity of the stage towards the front. The scene was powerless to oppose its progress, and quickly went down before the resistless fury of the storm, which next swept on towards the infirm old King inspiring him with an agility as graceful as it was sudden. Even the dignity of the musicians gave way, and they vaulted with their instruments into the parquet with various degrees of nimbleness, to the accompaniment of crashing glass chimneys and thumping cannon-balls. And in the midst of all this confusion and devastation the author of all the trouble lay prone upon the back of the stage—frightened completely out of the ability to rise.



"MERLIN."

ACT I.—Merlin, the son of an innocent young woman, forced into a union by Satan, inherits his mother's goodness and his father's magic power. Satan wished to use him as a means of injuring the human race; but being disappointed in his desires, he seeks he means of destroying Merlin. This, the Fay Morgana tells him can be accomplished by making him enamored of a beautiful woman. Vivien, "the wild huntswoman" appears accidentally at the Court of King Arthur, where the Knights are celebrating their victory over the Saxons. It was Merlin who gave this victory, with the aid of a Demon in his service. Vivien fascinates him, hitherto a stranger to love. She is about to place the victor's wreath on his head, when Merlin, vaguely realizing his danger, bids her begone. Vivien, threatening vengeance, throws the wreath at his feet.

ACT II.—King Arthur and his Knights depart in search of adventure, leaving Merlin in his temple. Vivien, with the assistance of the Demon antlers, and Merlin falls a victim to her charms, confessing his love. Regaining self-possession, he wishes to leave her, but she throws the magic veil over him. Amid the growling of thunder, the garden is changed into a wilderness, and Merlin remains attached to a rock with red-hot chains.

ACT III.—The Fay Morgana appears to the unhappy Vivien, and announces that Merlin can be saved through love, which is stronger than death. Meanwhile Arthur's nephew, Modred, has traitorously seized the throne. Merlin, summoned by Lancelot and the other Knights, wishes to avenge this wrong; but his chains hold him back, till finally the Demon set him free. Merlin wins another victory, but pays for it with his life. He is brought back wounded, and Vivien clasps his body as he dies. The Demon attempts to get possession of the body, but Vivien, remembering the words of the Fay Morgana, stabs herself, and the Demon vanishes.

ORIENTAL.

Who, when the effort wrinkle steals
On brow and cheek, its ravage heals?
Who but Gourand?

Handwriting may often be a safe index to character yet as a rule, it cannot hold good. Byron's hand was a school-boy scrawl, Macaulay's an ungraceful sprawl. Keat's was clerky, Scott's utterly disappointing. Emerson wrote in sprawling and illegible characters. Fenimore Cooper and Dickens wrote in a notoriously bad style, while the Ettrick Shepherd's was called "vile." Horace Greeley's was unreadable to all but one compositor who had made it a specialty, and Napoleon's letters to Josephine were mistaken for maps of war operations. On the other hand, Wellington's writing was clear and noble Washington's firm and dignified, Cromwell's bold and steady, Henry VIII's determined, and Franklin's large and bold. Of literary men—that of Gray's was neat and regular, Leigh Hunt's graceful, Moore's easy, Shakespeare's as remarkable as his poetry, Poe's strikingly beautiful, Tennyson's classic, Longfellow's vigorous and poetic looking; Holmes's graceful and quaint, Landor's bold and vigorous, Pitt's writing was flowing, Gladstone's is neat and regular. Lord Palmerston was a model of penmanship, and Chief-Justice Chase was celebrated for the beauty of his writing. Landor, in his "Imaginary Conversations," makes Aspasia say: "Men may be negligent of their hand-writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life; but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly."

THE COMIC IN MUSIC.

Gounod's "Funcral March, for a Marionette," is a graceful, melodious piece of music, in which there is nothing comic, but the title. No one would find it in the slightest degree amusing, but for the description of the incident it is supposed to illustrate, which is usually printed in the programmes of concerts where the said funeral march is to be performed.

In the old-fashioned Italian operas of the buffo type there are plenty of chattering songs in which the humor, such as it is, consists in the words being uttered so rapidly that any greater rapidity of utterance would seem to be impossible. Here some little amusement may be caused by witnessing the efforts of the buffo singer or singers—for there are often two or three of them chattering at once—to overcome such difficulties as have been deliberately put forward for that purpose by the composer. This, however, be humor, it is humor of a very mean order, on a par with that of "Peter Piper picked a peck of pepper,' and other verbal devices for testing the power of a speaker to speak rapidly, and at the same time distinctly.

Much that is considered comic in music possesses the same sort of drollery that belongs in comic writings to grammatical errors, or to mistakes in spelling. Romberg's "Toy Symphony," in which, with the usual orchestral basis, solo instruments of a burlesque character, such as the rattle, the penny trumpet, the child's drum, and so on, are from time to time introduced, is surprisingly funny. But with the first feeling of surprise the fun also vanishes; for the humor in this, as in all other toy symphonies, consists only in giving good music to bad instruments. If Romberg's symphony were played throughout with instruments of the best make in the parts written for the toys, no one not previously acquainted with the work would imagine for a moment that it was intended to be amusing.

In Mozart's "Musical Joke" again,the joke consists in the instruments coming in at wrong places, executing inappropriate phrases, and playing out of tune.— Edwards' Life of Rossini.

ROSSINI'S "CHESTNUT."

Rossini's favorite joke was in regard to his age. He was born on February 29, 1792 ; and the circumstance of his having come into the world in a leap year justified him, he used to claim, in counting his birthday, not annually, according to the usual custom, but once every four years. According to this method of computation he had numbered nineteen birthdays when, at the age of seventy-seven, he died. Rossini was born in the very year that Mozart died. He was a composer of extraordinary activity, as shown by the fact that by the time he was thirty-seven he had written thirty-seven operas; while, during the period of his greatest fertility, he frequently produced as many as four operas in one year, and more than once he completed an opera within a fortnight.

"MERLIN."

I, AKT.—Merlin, der Sohn des Satans und einer Jungfrau, heilt vom Vater die Zauberpracht und die Prophetengabe, von der Mutter die Frömmigkeit. Der Satan fürchtet immer mehr, dieses Werkzeugs, das er für seine Zwecke sich geschaffen, verlustig zu gehen, und sinnt auf Mittel, Merlin zu verführen. Dies soll, wie ihm die Fee Morgana offenbart, durch einen schönes Weib gelingen, Viviane, " die wilde Jägerin," dringt unverrehens in den Burghof des Königs Artus, wo gerade ein Sieg über die Sachsen gefeiert wird, Merlin, der mit Hilfe des ihm dienstbaren "Dämons" den Feind verwirrt und dadurch den Sieg der Briten entschieden hat, zwingt durch die blosse Kraft seines Scherblicks einen treulosen Officier zum Geständniss seines Verrathes. Merlin's Herz kennt keine irdische Regung; der Klang seiner Harfe begeistert ihn zu allem Hohen und Edlen. Da kommt Viviane here,ngestürmt und bezaubert ihn mit ihren Blicken, ihrer Schönheit. Sie soll ihm, so wollen es Volk, Hof und Siegeskrau z zufs Haupt drücken. Da erschrickt Merlin, ganz in Vivine's Anblick verloren, über die plötzliche Wandlung in seinem Innern—die Harfe, bei welcher er Rettung sucht, gibt keinen Ton mehr. " Fort! Fort! Ich hasse dich, du Teufelin!" Viviane, entrüstet, verspricht, seinen Hass zu vergelten,und wirft ihn den Klerikern zu Füssen.

II. AKT.—König Artus und seine Getreuen ziehen auf Abenteuer ihres Meer, während Merlin, gebrochen, mit sich selbst zerfallen, sich in seinen Tempel zurückzieht. Viviane nähert sich neugierig dem Tempel; mit Hilfe des Dämons sprengt sie die verschlossene Pforte, was wieder Merlin ihr entgegentritt. Nach einigen heftigen Worten der Anklage werden sie Beide inne, dass ihr Hass nur die aufgezwungene Rüstung ihrer schwachen Herzen, das sie sorgen sie ab und tauschen in langer Umarmung das Geständniss der Liebe. Merlin, in welchem Reue und Pflichtgefühl wieder erwachen, will sie verlassen. Um den Getrennten festzuhalten, wirft sie den verhängnissvollen Zauberschleier, der in Merlin's Heiligthum verwahrt gelegen, über ihn. Ein Donnerschlag—der blühende Garten ist in eine Wildniss verwandelt. Merlin liegt halbentgeichteten Leibes auf einem Felsen, mit glühenden Ketten angeschmiedet.

III. AKT.—Der verzweifelnden Viviane erscheint die Fee Morgana mit der tröstenden Verheissung: " Liebe, stärker als der Tod, wird ihm ewigen Heil erringen!" Inzwischen hat Artus' Neffe, Modred den der König als Reichsverweser zurückgelassen, treulos sich des Thrones bemächtigt und den Feinden die Lande verthdeut. Merlin selbst hatte seines Scherblicks beraubt, diesen Verräther für " ein wie Schnee " erklärt. Von Lancelot und anderen treugebliebenen Rittern zu Hilfe gerufen, zerrt Merlin, selbst hilflos und von Rene gefoltert, an seinen glühenden Ketten, die er nicht zu sprengen vermag. Er will, er muss sein Volk erretten, und wär es die Hölle, die ihn befreit! " Es sei!" ruft der Dämon; die Ketten fallen ab und Merlin eilt, nachdem er Vivianen ärtlich umarmt, in die Schlacht, Zu Tode verwundet, wird er auf eine Bahre niedergebracht. Der Sieg ist errungen, aber mit Merlin's Leben bezahlt. Viviane hält der Sterbenden liebend umschlungen; der Dämon will ihr die Bitterkeit streitig machen, aber Viviane, die Worte der Fee Morgana wiederholend, ersticht sich an Merlin's Leiche —der Dämon versinkt.—Neue Freie Presse.

At a recent sale of autographs in Berlin, those known to be Richard Wagner's brought the highest prices. His Essay on Meyerbeer—lately found —in which he expresses great admiration for the composer, sold for 640 marks, and one of his own compositions brought 960 marks. Letters to Laube, Meyerbeer and others ranged from 70 to 120 marks. A fragment of Wagner's diary, kept while in Paris sold for 115 marks. Two of Chopin's polonaises went for 400 marks.

It is said that Louis II, the late King of Bavaria, who was such a great patron of music and such a firm friend of Wagner, once broke off his engagement with a certain princess, because she fell asleep during a performance of one of Wagner's operas.

CHINESE SINGING.

The Chinese have in their classification of eight musical sounds utterly omitted to make any mention of the sound of the human voice. In all their great ceremonies, such as hymns of praise to heaven, and commemoration of the ancestors, songs are used, but never on these occasions are female voices allowed.

A slave is far more marketable with musical talents than without. It is seldom, however, that women assist in any concerts whatever; the instrumental playing as well as the singing being almost alway wholly rendered by men.

Few travelers have heard a musical Chinese lady sing, and those who have enjoyed this rare event, say it is the most torturing of all Chinese music; from the nose and throat issue the most droning and hideous sounds and they seem to pile Ossa upon Pelion in the way of unnatural tones.

The natural voice of the Chinese is rather high; and very high honors are not at all rare in the empire.

The voice in China is trained to much flexibility by the exigencies of the language, for the Chinese is, in one sense, the most musical of languages, as a word acquires half a dozen different significations according to the pitch of voice, or infliction with which it is pronounced.

The number of different words in the whole Chinese tongue does not exceed three hundred and fifty; all the additional ones are simply variations of these by lowering or raising the voice. This leads the foreigner into endless complications and misunderstandings; for example, the word tchu, pronounced clearly with the vowel of medium length, means "master," but by extending the vowel a trifle it signifies "hog;" it also means "column" and "cookery."—Elson's Curiosities of Music.

This is a story from Ceylon literature.

A king had a beautiful daughter whose one defect was that she could not be made to speak. Every means in his own power and that of the magicians failing—he offered her as a bride to any one who could make her talk. One day a handsome young prince appeared and was admitted. He possessed the singular gift of making inanimate objects converse. Before entering the princess' reception-room he stopped in the hall and thus addressed the lamp: "O Lamp! there was once a company of travelers met together at an inn. One was a carpenter, the next a painter, the third a cloth merchant, and the last a jeweler. The carpenter with his tools cut out of the floor a figure of a woman so beautiful that the painter could not resist—and he gave her the very colors of life—then the merchant covered her with his nicest stuffs, and, finally, the jeweler decorated her with his rarest jewels. Then came a hot discussion. To whom did she belong? They grew angrier and angrier. Now, O Lamp, which one was the rightful owner?" The lamp said one and then another, but the prince contradicted him every time, until their discussion was as furious as that of the four original disputants. The princess could stand it no longer—she must speak or explode. "You fools," she burst out "none of them owned her. She belonged to the inn-keeper, for wasn't she made out of his wood?" So the prince won her, and was never heard to complain of her silence, or even brevity.

This is an Englishman's idea of women: "A Frenchwoman will love her husband if he is witty or chivalrous; a German woman if he is constant and faithful; a Dutchwoman if he does not disturb her ease and comfort too much; a Spanish woman if he wreaks his vengeance on those who incur his displeasure; an Italian woman if he is dreamy and poetical; a Danish woman if he thinks her country the brightest and happiest on earth; a Russian woman if he despises all Westerners as miserable barbarians; an Englishwoman if he succeeds in ingratiating himself with the court and aristocracy; an American woman if he has plenty of money.

It is often interesting to notice the criticisms which greet the first appearance of a composition. Just after the first performance of Rubinstein's Ocean Symphony, which will shortly be given by the Symphony Society, the following criticism was given: "The music of this new symphony is dramatic rather than symphonic. The means employed are neither extravagant, nor too realistic, the composer is happily content to depict a moderate tempest. The orchestra is treated in a masterly manner, the scoring in some respects resembles Weber." Shortly before this a New York journal had sweepingly asserted that Rubinstein was a very great performer, and an equally bad composer!

So, too, when the "Flying Dutchman" was brought out, it called forth the following: "It is one of the most melodious and expressive compositions as yet submitted to the public by Wagner. It is second as an effort of genius, to Lohengrin. Another melody recently written to French words, 'Berceuse,' has met with a legitimate success. It is full of freshness and grace, and must have been conceived by the author of 'Die Meistersinger' in a moment of agreeable distraction. It might be mistaken for Mendelssohn or Schubert!"

"When I am in a crowded car and a lady comes in, I think it is the duty of some man to get up and give her his seat. I look around in the car to see if any man looks as if he were making a move in that direction; and when I see them all keep their seats, I hide my face behind my newspaper and blush for my sex,"

A young composer once wrote to Rossini, asking his advice as to the best method of composing an overture. Here is a portion of the answer: "Wait till the evening before the first performance, for nothing excites inspiration like necessity, the presence of a copyist waiting for your work, and the view of a manager in despair tearing out his hair by handfuls. In Italy, in my time, all the managers were bald at thirty.

"I composed the Overture to "Othello" in a small room in the Barbaja Palace where the baldest and most ferocious of managers had shut me up by force, with nothing but a dish of macaroni and the threat that I should not leave the place alive, until I had written the last note. I wrote the Overture to "Gazza Ladra" on the day of the first performance, in an upper loft of the Scala, where I had been confined by the manager under the guard of four scene-shifters, who had orders to throw my text out of the window bit by bit to the copyists who were waiting below to transcribe it. In default of the music I was to be thrown out. For Barbiere I did better. I composed no Overture but tacked on one intended for a very serious work called Elizabetta. The public were delighted. I composed the Overture to Count Ory, while angling, with my feet in the water and in the company of M. Aguado, who was talking Spanish finance all the time. That of "Gillaume Tell" was written under some what similar circumstances." This may be very well for a Rossini, but would be rather a dangerous experiment to recommen das general advice.

Shakespeare's insight into the function of music ranks him above all other poets. He knows that music "charmeth sleep," "killing care and grief of heart"; it "hath helped madmen to their wits," and "will make wise men mad." "I never heard so musical a discord, such sweet thunder," might be used as a test for a chapter on modern dramatic music.

TO HAVE A GOOD DISPOSITION AND BE POPULAR YOU MUST BE FREE FROM DYSPEPSIA. Adams' TUTTI FRUTTI Chewing Gum is good for Dyspepsia.

WHAT IS "TONE-COLOR?"

Professor Helmholtz has proved that, just as white is not a simple color, but a combination of all the hues of the rainbow, so any single tone produced by the voice or a musical instrument is not simple, but contains, besides the fundamental tone which the ordinary listener alone hears, several "partial" or "overtones," which blend so closely with the fundamental tone that it takes a very delicate ear and close attention to distinguish them.

Were it not for these overtones all instruments would sound alike, and music would lose all its charms of "color."

For the fundamental tones of voices and instruments are identical, and the only thing that enables a musician to tell at a distance whether a given note proceeds from a piano, voice, or violin, is the presence of these overtones, which vary in their number, relative loudness, and pitch, thus giving rise to the differences of quality or timbre in instruments.

TO BE BEAUTIFUL YOU MUST HAVE PEARLY-WHITE TEETH. Adams' Tutti Frutti Chewing Gum beautifies the teeth and preserves them.

Some time ago there came out in Paris a unique work, entitled "Dictionnaire Musique—Humoristique." The following are extracts from it:

Accompanist—The singer's crutch.

Arpeggio—A chord served up in small dishes.

Chef-d'orchestre—One who beats the time, or is beaten by it.

Counterpoint—An old contrivance for working up commonplace ideas. The "music of the future" of the fast.

Shout—A loud noise for which great singers are well paid, and small children well punished.

It is said that Louis II, the late King of Bavaria, who was such a great patron of music, and such a firm friend of Wagner, once broke off his engagement with a certain princess, because she fell asleep during a performance of one of Wagner's operas.

An adjective and its derivative adverb are often wide apart in application. For instance, the old illustration of the difference between a man constant in love, and a man constantly in love!

17 East 16th St., N. Y.

One of the features of the fashionable dinners thy season is the new dry wine ("strand Vin Sec") of Louis Roederer. It is also the proper thing to serve it at the swell weddings.

Early in this century, an Edinborough manager, bringing out "King Lear," hit upon a greatly improved device for making "stage-thunder." He laid a "corduroy" road of parallel timbers across the stage behind the scene, and over these the carpenter was instructed to trundle a wheel-barrow full of nine-pound cannon-balls. The experiment worked with beautiful success, but unfortunately just as Lear before the scene had worked up to his climax, the carpenter tripped a timber and away went the thunder, following the declivity of the stage towards the front. The scene was powerless to oppose its progress, and quickly went down before the resistless fury of the storm, which next swept on towards the infirm old King, inspiring him with an agility as graceful as it was sudden. Even the dignity of the musicians gave way, and they vaulted with their instruments into the parquet with various degrees of nimbleness, to the accompaniment of crashing glass chimneys and thumping cannon-balls. And in the midst of all this confusion and devastation the author of all the trouble lay prone upon the back of the stage—frightened completely out of the ability to rise.

PRIESTLEY'S CAMEL-HAIR FABRICS

Include a complete line of Camel-hair cloths, both for costumes and wraps of extra quality; the real India cloth, imitating the camel-hair effect with the graceful folds of Indian draperies; and the new silk warp diagonals and serges, the softest and most luxurious of materials yet firm in texture. They are equally suitable for wear in and out of mourning. None genuine unless rolled on a "Furnished Board," showing the grain of the wool, which is the Priestley trade-Mark. They are for sale by Lord & Taylor, Stern Bros., Jackson & Mengering Store, B. Altman & Co., Simpson, Crawford & Simpson, Le Boutillier Bros., H. ORIENTAL.

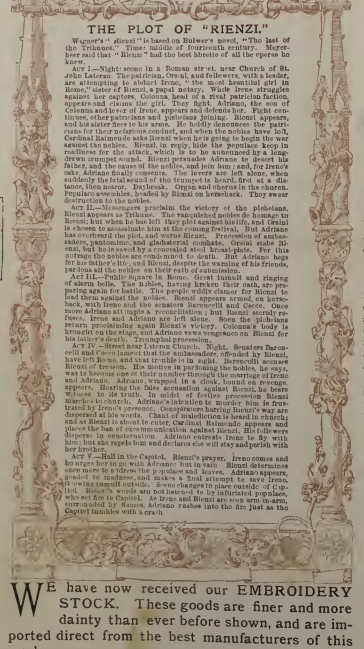
Who, when the silent wrinkle steals
On brow and cheek, its ravage heals?
Who but Gourand?

Handwriting may often be a safe index to character yet as a rule, it cannot hold good. Byron's hand was a school-boy scrawl, Macaulay's an ungraceful sprawl. Keat's was clerky, Scott's utterly disappointing. Emerson wrote in sprawling and illegible characters. Fenimore Cooper and Dickens wrote in a notoriously bad style, while the Ettrick Shepherd's was called "vile." Horace Greeley's was unreadable to all but one compositor who had made it a specialty, and Napoleon's letters to Josephine were mistaken for maps of war operations. On the other hand, Wellington's writing was clear and noble Washington's firm and dignified, Cromwell's bold and steady, Henry VIII's commanding, and Frazendus's large and bold. Of literary men—that of Gray's was neat and regular, Leigh Hunt's graceful, Moore's easy, Shakespeare's as remarkable as his poetry, Poe's strikingly beautiful, Tennyson's chaste, Longfellow's vigorous and poetic looking; Holmes's graceful and quaint, Landor's bold and vigorous, Pitt's writing was flowing, Gladstone's is neat and regular. Lord Palmerston was a model of penmanship, and Chief-Justice Chase was celebrated for the beauty of his writing. Landor, in his "Imaginary Conversations," makes Aspasia say: "Men may be negligent of their hand-writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life; but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly."



ARGUMENT
THE PLOT OF "RIENZI."
Wagner's "Rienzi" is based on Bulwer's novel, "The last of the Tribunes." Time: middle of fourteenth century. Murderer said that "Rienzi" had the best libretto of all the operas he knew.
Act I.—Night: scene in a Roman street, near Church of St. John Lateran. The patrician, Orsini, and fellow-vets, with a leader, are attempting to abduct Irene, "the most beautiful girl in Rome," sister of Rienzi, a papal notary. While Irene struggles against her captors, Colonna, head of a rival patrician faction, appears and claims the girl. They fight. Adriano, the son of Colonna and lover of Irene, appears and defends her. Fight continues, other patricians and plebeians joining. Rienzi appears, and his sister flees to his arms. He boldly denounces the patricians for their treasonable conduct, and when the nobles have left, Cardinal Raimondo asks Rienzi when he is going to begin the war against the nobles. Rienzi, in reply, bids the peaceful keep in readiness for the attack, which is to be announced by a long-drawn trumpet sounds. Rienzi persuades Adriano to desert his father, and the cause of the nobles, and join him; and, for Irene's sake, Adriano finally consents. The lovers are left alone, when suddenly the fatal sound of the trumpet is heard, first at a distance, then nearer. Bedlam! Organ and chorus in the church. Populace assembles, headed by Rienzi on horseback. They swear destruction to the nobles.
Act II.—Messengers proclaim the victory of the plebeians. Rienzi appears as Tribune. The vanquished nobles do homage to Rienzi; but when he has left they plot against him, and Orsini is chosen to assassinate him at the coming festival. But Adriano has overheard the plot, and warns Rienzi. Procession of ambassadors, pantomime, and gladiatorial combats. Orsini stabs Rienzi, but he is saved by a concealed steel breast-plate. For this outrage the nobles are condemned to death. But Adriano begs for his father's life, and Rienzi, despite the warning of his friends, spares the nobles on their oath of submission.
Act III.—Public Square in Rome. Great tumult and ringing of alarm bells. Tiber in flood, having broken through dams, are preparing again for battle. The people mildly clamor for Rienzi to lead them against the nobles. Rienzi appears armed, and is borne back with Irene and the senators Baroncelli and Cecco. Once more the people implore a reconciliation; but Rienzi sternly refuses. Irene and Adriano are left alone. Soon the pleb-ians return pressing the nobles before them as captives. Colonna's body is brought in dying. Adriano vows vengeance on Rienzi for his father's death. Triumphal procession.
Act IV.—Street near Lateran Church. Night. Senators Baroncelli and Cecco lament that the ambassadors, headed by Rienzi, have left Rome, and that trouble is in sight. Baroncelli accuses Rienzi of treason. His motive in pardoning the nobles, he says, was to become one of their number through the marriage of Irene and Adriano. Adriano, wrapped in a cloak, hooded, then appears. Hearing the false accusation against Rienzi, he bears witness to its truth. In midst of fresh accusations Rienzi marches to church. Adriano's indecision to murder him is frustrated by Irene's presence. Conspirators burst in. Adriano is dispersed at his words. Chant of solemn mass is heard in church; and as Rienzi is about to enter, Cardinal Raimondo appears and places the ban of excommunication against Rienzi. Bells severe Rienzi in consternation. Adriano entreats Irene to fly with him; but she repels him and declares she will stay and perish with her brother.
Act V.—Hall in the Capitol. Rienzi's prayer. Irene comes and he urges her to go with Adriano; but in vain. Rienzi determines once more to address the people and leaves. Adriano appears, goaded to madness, and makes a final attempt to carry off Irene, drawing threatening swords. Senators endeavor to save Capitol. Rienzi's words are not listened to by infuriated populace, who set fire to Capitol. As Irene and Rienzi are overcome by alarm, surrounded by flames, Adriano rushes into the fire just as the Capitol tumbles with a crash.

THE FUTURE OF MUSIC.

Music has a vast future before it. We are only now beginning to find out some of its uses. With the one exception of its obvious and admitted helpfulness, as an adjunct of religious worship, as a vehicle for and incentive of religious feeling, I had almost said that we had as yet discovered none of its uses.

"Music will some day become a powerful and acknowledged therapeutic, and it is one especially appropriate to this excited age. Half our diseases, some physicians say all our diseases, come from disorder of the nerves. How many ills of the mind precede the ills of the body! Boredom makes more patients than fever. Want of interest and excitement, stagnation of the emotional life, or the fatigue of over-wrought emotion, lies at the root of half the ill-health of our young men and women. Can we doubt the power of music to break up that stagnation? Or, again, can we doubt its power to soothe? To recreate an overstrained emotional life by bending the bow the other way?

"Music is not only a body healer it is a mind regulator. The great educational function of music remains almost to be discovered. The future mission of music for the million is Discipline of Emotion.

"Music, in short, is bound, when properly used and understood, to train us in the exercise of our emotions, as the gymnasium trains us in the exercise of our limbs. The Greeks understood both these uses; we probably understand neither."—Dr. Haweis.

BECKMESSER'S LUTE.

Many of those who laugh at Beckmesser's unskilled playing of the lute in Wagner's opera, "Die Meistersinger," probably do not know that this instrument stood in relation to the home music of the seventeenth century very much as the piano does to that of the nineteenth.

There were many varieties of lutes, of which the theorbo was the largest. In shape somewhat like a guitar; the lute differed from this instrument in having twenty-four strings, of which ten were never to be stopped, but were always played as open strings, and therefore had to be tuned over each time that a new key was used.

It was this constant necessity of retuning which drove the lute out of use. Mattheson, the contemporary of Handel, wittily estimates that, if a lutist lived up to the age of eighty, he had spent sixty years in tuning his instrument. The lute was sweeter-toned than the guitar, and was equally adapted for accompany song or for purely instrumental passages. Its tone was not unlike that of the zither.

The rise of the more easily tuned guitar, and the perfecting of the various keyed instruments drove the lute into oblivion. Yet it died hard; for we find Bach writing for it, and, even in the time of Mozart, composers for the instrument existed, and the lute still furnished the music of many a German household.

"RIENZI."

I. ACT.—Nachtscene in einer römischen Strasse. Der Patricier Orsini, mit Gefolge, bringt eine Leiter und versucht Irene, Schwester des Päpstlichen Notar's Rienzi, zu entführen. Während Irene sich vertheidigt, erscheint Colonna, Oberhaupt einer anderen patricischen Familie, und verlangt das Mädchen. Sie kämpfen. Adriano, Sohn des Colonna, erscheint und vertheidigt seine Geliebte, Irene. Rienzi kommt und Irene wirft sich in seine Arme. Er macht den Patriciern Vorwürfe, und nachdem sie weggegangen sind, trägt ihm der Cardinal Raimondo wann er den Kampf gegen die Patricier aufnehmen werde. Rienzi antwortet das Volk solle sich bereit halten zum Angriff, das Signal wü'de ein lauggebastener Trompetenton sein. Er überredet dann Adriano die Patricier zu verlassen und ihm beizustehen; und Adriano gehorcht ihm, aus Liebe zu Irene. Die Liebenden sind allein, als plötzlich die Trompete ert-nt. Rienzi erscheint zu Pferd; der Kampf beginnt.

II. ACT.—Friedenshoten verkündigen den Sieg Rienzi's, der als Volksretter erscheint. Die besiegten Patricier huldigen ihm, aber nachher beschliessen sie or müsse sterben und wählen Orsini als seinen Mörder. Aber Adriano, der also gehört, warnt Rienzi. Zug der Gesandten, und Gladiatorenkämpfe. Orsini versucht Rienzi zu ermörden, und die Patricier werden dafür zum Tode verdammt. Aber auf Adriano's Fürbitte verzeiht ihnen Rienzi.

III. ACT.—Grosser Tumult. Ungeachtet ihres Eides, bereiten sich die Patricier zum Kampfe vor. Rienzi erscheint zu Pferde, mit Irene und Senatoren. Wiederum bittet Adriano für die Patricier, doch umsonst. Adriano und Irene bleiben allein zurück. Rienzi siegt wieder, und Colonna's Leiche wird herbeigebracht. Adriano schwört Rache für seines Vaters Tod. Trauphzug.

IV. ACT.—Rienzi wird des Verrathes beschuldigt. Man sagt er wolle seine Schwester an Adriano verheirathen um Patricier zu werden. Adriano hört diese falsche Anklage und bestätigt sie aus Rachesucht. Während des Festzuges versucht Adriano Rienzi zu ermörden, wird aber durch Irene's Gegenwart verhindert. Cardinal Raimondo erscheint unter der Kirchenthüre und spricht den Kirchenbann gegen Rienzi aus. Seine Anhänger fliehen entsetzt; Adriano bittet Irene ihm zu folgen, aber sie stösst ihn zurück.

V. ACT.—Rienzi's Gebet. Erbittet Irene dem Adriano zu folgen, doch sie bleibt. Noch einmal versucht Rienzi das Volk anzureden. Grosser Tumult draussen. Sturmgeläute. Das Volk wirft Feuerbrände ins Capitol. Man sieht Irene und Rienzi. Adriano eilt hinein um Irene zu retten. In diesem Augenblick stürzt das Gebäude zusammen.

WAGNER'S "MEISTERSINGER."

Wagner's "Meistersinger" is conspicuous among all his works as being his only comic opera. Satiric opera would, perhaps, be a better term; for it is not comic exactly in the sense in which the operas of Mozart, Rossini and Auber are comic. The humor is essentially German—a combination of playfulness, exuberant animal spirits, practical jokes, satire, burlesque, and withal an under-current of seriousness and even sadness, as is the case with all the best humorous literature.

What makes the satire in the "Meistersinger" the more interesting, is the fact that it has a biographic significance. The opera is, in fact, a musical autobiography—a sketch of Wagner's own life and struggles with his critics and public opinion. Walter, the hero of the opera, with his novel melody that violates the pedantic rules of the master-singers, represents the "music of the future"; Beckmesser represents the malicious and narrow-minded critics, who can see no good in anything that is new in art; and the poet, Hans Sachs, represents enlightened public opinion, always ready to appreciate a genius in advance of his professional colleagues Wagner also burlesques in a very droll manner some of those features of the old-fashioned operatic style, which are now generally admitted to be undramatic and absurd.

Each of Wagner's operas is so novel in subject and musical ideas, that, on hearing one after the other, one might imagine himself transferred to a new world of sounds. But between none of his operas are the differences so great as between "Tristan and Isolde" and "Die Meistersinger,' though they were composed in immediate succession, "Tristan" is like a rapturous nocturne in the tropics, "Die Meistersinger" like a festival day in the bracing, cheerful atmosphere of the north. It contains some of the finest choruses ever written—especially in the third act; besides lyric pieces, processions, and even a waltz; and the whole opera gives a most striking and realistic picture of quaint medieval life in Germany.

It was Wagner's own opinion that "Die Meistersinger," more than any other work of his, would appeal to non-German audiences.

"Die Meistersinger," though it contains so many elements of popularity, is one of Wagner's most mature works. It was composed just after "Tristan," which he himself regarded as the nearest approach to his ideal of the music-drama, and which itself followed "Rheingold" and "Die Walkure," the first two volumes of the Nibelung Tetrology. The first sketch of the plot of "Die Meistersinger," however, belongs to a much earlier period, having been made even before the composition of "Lohengrin." Immediately after completing the score of "Tannhauser," Wagner visited one of the Bohemian summer resorts, and there, partly urged by friends, who desired him to try his powers in some other than the tragic fields, originated the idea of writing a comic opera, a sequel to "Tannhäuser" (which also deals with a vocal prize contest), just as among the Greeks a satire-play was wont to follow the performance of a tragedy.

"Die Meistersinger" and "Rienzi" are Wagner's only operas that are based on historical instead of mythological subjects.

SCHUMANN ON WAGNER.

Wagner's "Tannhäuser" is at present one of the most popular works in the operatic repertory, not only in Germany, but in this country, and even in Spain and Italy. But when it was first produced it was almost unanimously denounced by the critics, including even so liberal a man as Schumann. In the second volume of Schumann's Letters, issued only a few weeks ago by a Leipzig publisher, occurs the following astounding passage in a letter to Mendelssohn, dated Oct. 25, 1845:

"Wagner has just finished a new opera—no doubt a clever fellow, full of eccentric notions, and bold beyond measure—the aristocracy is still in raptures over him on account of his "Rienzi," but in reality he cannot conceive or write four consecutive bars of good or even correct music. What all these composers lack is the art of writing pure harmonies and four-part choruses.

The music is not a straw better than that of "Rienzi," rather weaker, more artificial! But if I should write this I would be accused of envy, hence I say it only to you, as I am aware that you have known all this a long time."

Three weeks later, however, Schumann again wrote to Mendelssohn: "I must take back much of what I wrote regarding "Tannhäuser," after reading the score; on the stage the effect is quite different. I was deeply moved by many parts."

Two months after this (Jan. 7, 1846) he wrote to H. Dorn: "I wish you could see Wagner's 'Tannhäuser.'" It contains profound and original ideas, and is a hundred times better than his previous operas, though some of the music is trivial. In a word he may become of great importance to the stage, and so far as I know him, he has the requisite courage. The technical part, the instrumentation, I find excellent, incomparably more masterly than formerly. He has already finished a text, called 'Lohengrin.'"

In another letter to Mendelssohn, Schumann writes: "Wagner surprised us yesterday by showing us his new opera book, 'Lohengrin.' In my case the surprise was double, for I have had in my mind for a year the same subject, or a similar one of the time of the Round Table, and now I shall have to throw it away. Most of those present were exceptionally pleased with the text, especially the painters.

"If the most exquisite orchestral music could be continued without a pause for a series of years, and children were brought up and educated in the room in which it was perpetually resounding, I believe their enjoyment of music, or understanding of it, would be very small."—Ruskin.

A young composer once wrote to Rossini, asking his advice as to the best method of composing an overture. Here is a portion of the answer: "Wait till the evening before the first performance, for nothing excites inspiration like necessity, the presence of a copyist waiting for your work, and the view of a manager in despair tearing out his hair by handfuls. In Italy, in my time, all the managers were bald at thirty.

"I composed the Overture to "Othello" in a small room in the Barbaja Palace where the baldest and most ferocious of managers had shut me up by force, with nothing but a dish of macaroni and the threat that I should not leave the place alive, until I had written the last note. I wrote the Overture to "Gazza Ladra" on the day of the first performance, in an upper loft of the Scala, where I had been confined by the manager under the guard of four scene-shifters, who had orders to throw my text out of the window bit by bit to the copyists who were waiting below to transcribe it. In default of the music I was to be thrown out. For Barbiere I did better. I composed no Overture but tacked on one intended for a very serious work called Elizabetta. The public were delighted. I composed the Overture to Count Ory, while angling, with my feet in the water and in the company of M. Aguado, who was talking Spanish finance all the time. That of "Gillaume Tell" was written under some what similar circumstances," etc. This may be very well for a Rossini, but would be rather a dangerous experiment to recommen das general advice.

Shakespeare's insight into the function of music ranks him above all other poets. He knows that music "charmeth sleep," "killing care and grief of heart"; it "hath helped madmen to their wits," and "will make wise men mad." "I never heard so musical a discord, such sweet thunder," might be used as a text for a chapter on modern dramatic music.

WHAT IS "TONE-COLOR?"

Professor Helmholtz has provcd that, just as white is not a simple color, but a combination of all the hues of the rainbow, so any single tone produced by the voice or a musical instrument is not simple, but contains, besides the fundaments tone which the ordinary listener alone hears, several "partial" or "overtones," which blend so closely with the fundamental tone that it takes a very delicate ear and close at tention to distinguish them.

Were it not for these overtones all instruments would sound alike, and music would lose all its charms of 'color."

For the fundamental tones of voices and instruments are identical, and the only thing that enables a musician to tell at a distance whether a given note proceeds from a piano, voice, or violin. is the presence of these overtones. which vary in their numbcr, relative loudness, and pitch. thus giving rise to the differences of quality or timbre in instruments.

TO BE BEAUTIFUL YOU MUST HAVE PEARLY-WHITE TEETH. Adams' Tutti Frutti Chewing Gum beautifies the teeth and preserves them.

How little we think of all that is involved in the beautiful laces which delight our eyes and make light our purses! Sometimes a fine piece of Brussels lace requires the work of seven persons. The thread used is so delicate that it must be spun in damp unhealthy cellars to keep it from separating and becoming unmanageable. This is at a cost of human life! A piece of Valenciennes not two inches wide requires about 300 bobbins, while many patterns need 800.

WHY MOZART WAS POOR.

There was not the famous ingratitude of people who will not recognize a prophet in his own country; there was not a complicated intrigue of powerful enemies. for he had lots of friends. It was solely his inability to recognize the practical side of litc, and to use his friends' advice properly. It is all very fine to say a lofty genius like that thinks only of creating immortal works; what does he know, and how can he be disposed to think of butcher and baker? Charming! But so long as a genius is bound to inhabit a machine whose texture wants daily keeping up by what must be bought from baker and butcher, and so long as interruption of this thoroughly prosaic proceeding has the effect of destroying the very brain which is the seat of the genius, so long will the "lofty purpose" be dragged down, as it were, with heavy, but not-to-be-got-rid-of weights, and there is no choice left but to pay the penalty. In life everything is a bargain. You want to be romantic, to run out in the moonshine, dream of her and sigh to the clouds? Do, by all means. Only next morning you will sneeze, have a headache, and wish the moon and the clouds anywhere. You have had your pleasure—pay for it.—Louis Enget's Reminiscences.

One of the features of the fashionable dinners this season is the new dry wine ("Grand Vin Sec") of Louis Roederer. It is also the proper thing to serve it at the swell weddings.

Early in this century, an Edinborough manager, bringing out "King Lear," hit upon a greatly improved device for making "stage-thunder." He laid a "corduroy" road of parallel timbers across the stage behind the scene, and over these the carpenter was instructed to trundle a couple of barrow full of nine-pound cannon-balls. The experiment worked with beautiful success, but unfortunately, just as Lear before the scene had worked up to his climax, the carpenter tripped a timber and away went the thunder, following the declivity of the stage towards the front. The scene was powerless to oppose its progress, and quickly went down before the resistless fury of the storm, which next swept on towards the infirm old King, inspiring him with an agility as graceful as it was sudden. Even the dignity of the musicians gave way, and they vaulted with their instruments into the parquet with various degrees of nimbleness, to the accompaniment of crashing glass chimneys and rumbling cannon-balls. And in the midst of all this confusion and devastation the author of all the trouble lay prone upon the back of the stage—frightened completely out of the ability to rise.

"Tristan and Isolde."

ARGUMENT

Act I.—Prow of a large ship. The Knight Tristan has been sent from Cornwall to Ireland to bring over the Princess Isolde as bride for his uncle, King Marke. Isolde, however, loves Tristan and he loves her; but, true to his post of honor, he refuses to see her on the journey. This seeming neglect so enrages her that she sends her attendant, Brangäne, to fetch a vial containing a deadly poison. This she puts in a cup, summons Tristan, and bids him drink it. But, before he has finished, she snatches away the cup, and drinks what remains, Brangäne, however, had secretly substituted a magic love-potion for the poison. It is this that now rapidly courses through the veins of the lovers and so inflames their passion that, regardless of everything, they fly to one another's arms. At this moment the sailors' chorus announces the arrival of the ship at Cornwall. The King approaches to meet his bride.

Act II.—Garden adjoining Isolde's apartment. A torch is burning near the door, the extinction of which is to announce to Tristan that all is safe for a clandestine interview. Forest horns are heard dying away in the distance, indicating the departure of the King on a hunting expedition. This, however, is a mere ruse, intended to put the lovers off their guard; for Melot, one of the courtiers, jealous of Tristan, had warned the King. Brangäne suspects the treachery, but Isolde refuses to listen to her. She dashes the torch to the ground, and Tristan appears. Grand love-duo. Suddenly the King and his party appear. The King reproaches Tristan, who at first attempts to hide Isolde. Melot, provoked by Tristan, shouts "Treason!" and stabs him.

Act III.—Tristan, unconscious, lies on a couch in the yard of his castle in Bretagne, whither his attendant, Kurwenal, had conveyed him after his affray with Melot. Fearing for Tristan's life, Kurwenal had sent for Isolde. A shepherd has been stationed on the rock to watch for her ship. His melody, at first sad and slow, suddenly becomes agitated, and Kurwenal rushes down to meet Isolde. While he is away the delirious Tristan tears away his bandage. Isolde arrives just in time to catch his body in her arms. Suddenly the shepherd announces the arrival of another ship with the King and followers. Kurwenal quickly barricades the door and stabs Melot, but receives a stab in return, and falls dead by Tristan's side. The King, however, having heard from Brangäne of the love-potion, had come not to reclaim his bride but to give her to Tristan. Isolde, bending over Tristan's body, sings her dying song, called by a French admirer, "the swan-song of love, the marriage of two human souls with the world-soul."

Handwriting may often be a safe index to character yet as a rule, it cannot hold good. Byron's hand was a school-boy scrawl, Macaulay's an ungraceful sprawl. Keat's was clerky, Scott's utterly disappointing. Emerson wrote in sprawling and illegible characters. Fenimore Cooper and Dickens wrote in a notoriously bad style, while the Ettrick Shepherd's was called "vile." Horace Greeley's was unreadable to all but one compositor who had made it a specialty, and Napoleon's letters to Josephine were mistaken for maps of war operations. On the other hand, Wellington's writing was clear and noble Washington's firm and dignified, Cromwell's bold and steady. Henry VIII's determined, and Franklin's large and bold. Of literary men—that of Gray's was neat and regular, Leigh Hunt's graceful, Moore's easy, Shakespeare's as remarkable as his poetry, Poe's strikingly beautiful, Tennyson's classic, Longfellow's vigorous and poetic looking; Holmes's graceful and quaint, Landor's bold and vigorous, Pitt's writing was flowing, Gladstone's is neat and regular. Lord Palmerston was a model of penmanship, and Chief-Justice Chase was celebrated for the beauty of his writing. Landor, in his "Imaginary Conversations," makes Aspasia say: "Men may be negligent of their hand-writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life; but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly."

THE FUTURE OF MUSIC.

"Music has a vast future before it. We are only now beginning to find out some of its uses. With the one exception of its obvious and admitted helpfulness, as an adjunct of religious worship, as a vehicle for and incentive of religious feeling, I had almost said that we had as yet discovered none of its uses.

"Music will some day become a powerful and acknowledged therapeutic, and it is one especially appropriate to this excited age. Half our diseases, some physicians say all our diseases, come from disorder of the nerves. How many ills of the mind precede the ills of the body! Boredom makes more patients than fever. Want of interest and excitement, stagnation of the emotional life, or the fatigue of over-wrought emotion, lics at the root of half the ill-health of our young men and women. Can we doubt the power of music to break up that stagnation? Or, again, can we doubt its power to soothe? To recreate an overstrained emotional life by bending the bow the other way?

"Music is not only a body healer it is a mind regulator. The great educational function of music remains almost to be discovered. The future mission of music for the million is Discipline of Emotion.

"Music, in short, is bound, when properly used and understood, to train us in the exercise of our emotions as the gymnasium trains us in the exercise of our limbs. The few understood both these uses; we probably understand neither."—Dr. Haweis.

BECKMESSER'S LUTE.

Many of those who laugh at Beckmesser's unskilled playing of the lute in Wagner's opera, "Die Meistersinger," probably do not know that this instrument stood in relation to the home music of the seventeenth century very much as the piano does to that of the nineteenth.

There were many varieties of lutes, of which the theorbo was the largest. In shape somewhat like a guitar; the lute differed from this instrument in having twenty-four strings, of which ten were never to be stopped, but were always played as open strings, and therefore had to be tuned over each time that a new key was used.

It was this constant necessity of retuning which drove the lute out of use. Mattheson, the contemporary of Handel, wittily estimates that, if a tuist lived up to the age of eighty, he had spent sixty years in tuning his instrument. The lute was sweeter-toned than the guitar, and was equally adapted for accompany song or for purely instrumental passages. Its tone was not unlike that of the zither.

The rise of the more easily tuned guitar, and the perfecting of the various keyed instruments drove the lute into oblivion. Yet it died hard; for we find Bach writing for it, and, even in the time of Mozart, composers for the instrument existed, and the lute still furnished the music of many a German household.

"Tristan und Isolde."
I, Akt.—Der Ritter Tristan ist von Kornwall nach Irland geschickt worden um die Prinzessin Isolde als Braut für seinen Oheim, König Marke, zu überführen. Isolde aber liebt Tristan und er liebt sie. Er bleibt jedoch ferne von ihr während der Reise, wie es die ritterlichen Gesetze von einem Brautwerber forderten. Isolde fühlt sich durch diese Verschlossigung beleidigt, und schickt ihre Begleiterin, Brangäne, hinunter um ein Giftfläschen heraufzuholen. Dann gießt sie den Inhalt in einen Becher, lässt Tristan holen, und fordert ihn auf zu trinken; doch ehe er damit fertig ist reisst sie den Becher aus seiner Hand und trinkt den Rest. Brangäne hatte ihr aber statt des Giftes einen Liebes Trank gegeben; und durch diesen Trank entbrennt nun die Leidenschaft der Liebenden allmälig, bis sie, alles vergessend, sich feurig umarmen. In diesem Augenblick kündigt der Marschenker die Ankunft des Schiffes in Kornwall an. Der König kommt seiner Braut entgegen.
II, Akt.—Garten neben Isolden's Gemach. Eine Fackel brennt neben die Thüre, dessen Erlöschung dem Tristan anzeigen soll dass alles sicher ist für eine geheime Zusammenkunft. Man hört Waldhörner, die sich allmälich entfernen, als Zeichen dass der König auf die Jagd gegangen ist. Dies ist aber nur eine List um die Liebenden zu täuschen. Denn Melot, ein Höfling, eifersüchtig auf Tristan, hatte den König gewarnt. Brangäne erräth die List, aber Melot hört nicht auf sie, sondern löscht die Fackel, worauf Tristan erscheint. Grosses Liebesduett. Plötzlich erscheint der König mit seinen Gefährten. Der König macht Tristan bittere Vorwürfe, aber Tristan hört ihn kaum und wendet sich an Isolde, Melot ruft "Verrath" und verwundet Tristan.
III, Akt.—Tristan liegt besinnungslos in dem Hof seines Schlosses in Bretagne, wohin der treue Kurvenal ihn gebracht hatte. Fürchtend dass Tristan sterben werde, hatte Kurvenal Wort an Isolde geschickt. Ein Schäfer auf dem Felsen passt auf die Ankunft ihres Schiffes. Sein Lied, zuerst traurig, wird plötzlich freudig erregt, und Kurvenal eilt um Isolde zu empfangen. Kaum ist er fort als Tristan den Verband von der Wunde weg reisst, und als Isolde erscheint fällt er entseelt in ihre Arme. Der Schäfer kündigt die Ankunft eines zweiten Schiffes an, mit dem König und Gefolge. Kurvenal sucht sie abzuhalten und ersticht Melot, wird aber selbst verwundet und stürzt entseelt neben Tristan's Leiche hin. Der König aber war gekommen nicht um seine Braut zurückzuholen sondern um sie dem Tristan zu geben; denn Brangäne hatte ihm das Geheimniss des Liebestrank mitgetheilt. Isolde singt sterbend den "Liebestod"—"Das Schwanenlied der Liebe, die Verwählung zweier verschwisterten Seelen mit der Weltseele."

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth-Patches, Rash and Skin diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 33 years, and is so harmless we taste it to be sure the preparation is properly made.

Accept no counterfeit of similar name. The distinguished Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut ton (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend "Gouraud's Cream" as the least harmful of all the skin preparations." One bottle will last three months, using it every day. Also Poudre Subtile removes superfluous hair without injury to the skin. FERD. T. HOPKINS, Manager, 48 Bond Street, N. Y.

WAGNER'S "MEISTERSINGER."

Wagner's "Meistersinger" is conspicuous among all his works as being his only comic opera. Satiric opera would, perhaps, be a better term; for it is not comic exactly in the sense in which the operas of Mozart, Rossini and Auber are comic. The humor is essentially German—a combination of playfulness, exuberant animal spirits, practical jokes, satire, burlesque, and withal an under-current of seriousness and even sadness, as is the case with all the best humorous literature.

What makes the satire in the "Meistersinger" the more interesting, is the fact that it has a biographic significance. The opera is, in fact, a musical autobiography—a sketch of Wagner's own life and struggles with his critics and public opinion. Walter, the hero of the opera, with his novel melody that violates the pedantic rules of the master-singers, represents the "music of the future"; Beckmesser represents the malicious and narrow-minded critics, who can see no good in anything that is new in art; and the poet, Hans Sachs, represents enlightened public opinion, always ready to appreciate a genius in advance of his professional colleagues Wagner also burlesques in a very droll manner some of those features of the old-fashioned operatic style, which are now generally admitted to be undramatic and absurd.

Each of Wagner's operas is so novel in subject and musical ideas, that, on hearing one after the other, one might imagine himself transferred to a new world of sounds. But between none of his operas are the differences so great as between "Tristan and Isolde" and "Die Meistersinger,' though they were composed in immediate succession, "Tristan" is like a rapturous nocturne in the tropics, "Die Meistersinger" like a festival day in the bracing cheerful atmosphere of the north. It contains some of the finest choruses ever written—especially in the third act; besides lyric pieces, processions, and even a waltz; and the whole opera gives a most striking and realistic picture of quaint mediæval life in Germany.

It was Wagner's own opinion that "Die Meistersinger," more than any other work of his, would appeal to non-German audiences.

"Die Meistersinger," though it contains so many elements of popularity, is one of Wagner's most mature works. It was composed just after "Tristan," which he himself regarded as the nearest approach to his ideal of the music-drama, and which itself followed "Rheingold" and "Die Walkure," the first two volumes of the Nibelung Tetrology. The first sketch of the plot of "Die Meistersinger," however, belongs to a much earlier period, having been made even before the composition of "Lohengrin." Immediately after completing the score of "Tannhäuser," Wagner visited one of the Bohemian summer resorts, and there, partly urged by friends, who desired him to try his powers in some other than the tragic fields, originated the idea of writing a comic opera, a sequel to "Tannhäuser" (which also deals with a vocal prize contest), just as among the Greeks a satire-play was wont to follow the performance of a tragedy.

"Die Meistersinger" and "Rienzi" are Wagner's only operas that are based on historical instead of mythological subjects.

SCHUMANN ON WAGNER.

Wagner's "Tannhäuser" is at present one of the most popular works in the operatic repertory, not only in Germany, but in this country, and even in Spain and Italy. But when it was first produced it was almost unanimously denounced by the critics, including even so liberal a man as Schumann. In the second volume of Schumann's Letters, issued only a few weeks ago by a Leipzig publisher, occurs the following astounding passage in a letter to Mendelssohn, dated Oct. 27, 1845:

"Wagner has just finished a new opera—no doubt a clever fellow, full of eccentric notions, and bold beyond measure—the aristocracy is still in raptures over him on account of his "Rienzi," but in reality he cannot conceive or write four consecutive bars of good or even correct music. What all these composers lack is the art of writing pure harmonies and four-part choruses.

The music is not a straw better than that of "Rienzi," rather weaker, more artificial! But if I should write this I would be accused of envy, hence I say it only to you, as I am aware that you have known all this a long time."

Three weeks later, however, Schumann again wrote to Mendelssohn: "I must take back much of what I wrote regarding "Tannhäuser," after reading the score; on the stage the effect is quite different. I was deeply moved by many parts."

Two months after this (Jan. 7, 1846) he wrote to H. Dorn: "I wish you could see Wagner's 'Tannhäuser.'" It contains profound and original ideas, and is a hundred times better than his previous operas, though some of the music is trivial. In a word he may become of great importance to the stage, and so far as I know him, he has the requisite courage. The technical part, the instrumentation, I find excellent, incomparably more masterly than formerly. He has already finished a text, called 'Lohengrin.'"

In another letter to Mendelssohn, Schumann writes: "Wagner surprised us yesterday by showing us his new opera book, 'Lohengrin.' In my case the surprise was double, for I have had in my mind for a year the same subject, or a similar one of the time of the Round Table, and now I shall have to throw it away. Most of those present were exceptionally pleased with the text, especially the painters.

"If the most exquisite orchestral music could be continued without a pause for a series of years, and children were brought up and educated in the room in which it was perpetually resounding, I believe their enjoyment of music, or understanding of it, would be very small."—Ruskin.

A young composer once wrote to Rossini, asking his advice as to the best method of composing an overture. Here is a portion of the answer: "Wait till the evening before the first performance, for nothing excites inspiration like necessity, the presence of a copyist waiting for your work, and the view of a manager in despair tearing out his hair by handfuls. In Italy, in my time, all the managers were bald at thirty.

"I composed the Overture to "Othello" in a small room in the Barbaja Palace where the baldest and most ferocious of managers had shut me up by force, with nothing but a dish of macaroni and the threat that I should not leave the place alive, until I had written the last note. I wrote the Overture to "Gazza Ladra" on the day of the first performance, in an upper loft of the Scala, where I had been confined by the manager under the guard of four scene-shifters, who had orders to throw my text out of the window bit by bit to the copyists who were waiting below to transcribe it. In default of the music I was to be thrown out. For Barbiere I did better. I composed no Overture but tacked on one intended for a very serious work called Elizabetta. The public were delighted. I composed the Overture to Count Ory, while angling, with my feet in the water and in the company of M. Aguado, who was talking Spanish finance all the time. That of "Gillaume Tell" was written under some what similar circumstances," etc. This may be very well for a Rossini, but would be rather a dangerous experiment to recommen das general advice.

Shakespeare's insight into the function of music ranks him above all other poets. He knows that music "charmeth sleep," "killing care and grief of heart"; it "hath helped madmen to their wits," and "will make wise men mad." WHAT IS "TONE-CCLOR?"

Professor Helmholtz has proved that, just as white is not a simple color, but a combination of all the hues of the rainbow, so any single tone produced by the voice or a musical instrument is not simple, but contains, besides the fundamental tone which the ordinary listener alone hears, several "partial" or "overtones," which blend so closely with the fundamental tone that it takes a very delicate ear and close at tention to distinguish them.

Were it not for these overtones all instruments would sound alike, and music would lose all its charms of 'color."

For the fundamental tones of voices and instruments are identical, and the only thing that enables a musician to tell at a distance whether a given note proceeds from a piano, voice, or violin, is the presence of these overtones, which vary in their number, relative loudness, and pitch, thus giving rise to the differences of quality or timbre in instruments.

TO BE BEAUTIFUL YOU MUST HAVE PEARLY-WHITE TEETH. Adams' Tutti Frutti Chewing Gum beautifies the teeth and preserves them.

How little we think of all that is involved in the beautiful laces which delight our eyes and make light our purses! Sometimes a fine piece of Brussels lace requires the work of seven persons. The thread used is so delicate that it must be spun in damp unhealthy cellars to keep it from separating and becoming unmanageable. This is at a cost of human life! A piece of Valenciennes not two inches wide requires about 300 bobbins, while many patterns need 800.

WHY MOZART WAS POOR.

There was not the famous ingratitude of people who will not recognize a prophet in his own country; there was not a complicated intrigue of powerful enemies, for he had lots of friends. It was solely his inability to recognize the practical side of life, and to use his friends' advice properly. It is all very fine to say a lofty genius like that thinks only of creating immortal works; what does he know, and how can he be disposed to think of butcher and baker? Charming! But so long as a genius is bound to inhabit a machine whose texture wants daily keeping up by what must be bought from baker and butcher, and so long as interruption of this thoroughly prosaic proceeding has the effect of destroying the very brain which is the seat of the genius, so long will the "lofty purpose" be dragged down, as it were, with heavy, but not-to-be-got-rid-of weights, and there is no choice left but to pay the penalty. In life everything is a bargain. You want to be romantic, to run out in the moonshine, dream of her and sigh to the clouds? Do, by all means. Only next morning you will sneeze, have a headache, and wish the moon and the clouds anywhere. You have had your pleasure—pay for it.—Louis Engel's Reminiscences.

"Tristan and Isolde."

ACT I.—Prow of a large ship. The Knight Tristan has been sent from Cornwall to Ireland to bring over the Princess Isolde as bride for his uncle, King Marke. Isolde, however, loves Tristan and he loves her; but, true to his post of honor, he refuses to see her on the journey. This seeming neglect so enrages her that she sends her attendant, Brangäne, to fetch a vial containing a deadly poison. This she puts in a cup, summons Tristan, and bids him drink it. But, before he has finished, she snatches away the cup, and drinks what remains. Brangäne, however, had secretly substituted a magic love-potion for the poison. It is this that now rapidly courses through the veins of the lovers and so inflames their passion that, regardless of everything, they fly to one another's arms. At this moment the sailors' chorus announces the arrival of the ship at Cornwall. The King approaches to meet his bride.

ACT II.—Garden adjoining Isolde's apartment. A torch is burning near the door, the extinction of which is to announce to Tristan that all is safe for a clandestine interview. Forest horns are heard dying away in the distance, indicating the departure of the King on a hunting expedition. This, however, is a mere ruse, intended to put the lovers off their guard; for Melot, one of the courtiers, jealous of Tristan, had warned the King. Brangäne suspects the treachery, but Isolde refuses to listen to her. She dashes the torch to the ground, and Tristan appears. Grand love-duo, suddenly the King and his party appear. The King reproaches Tristan, who at first attempts to hide Isolde, Melot, provoked by Tristan, shouts "Treason!" and stabs him.

ACT III.—Tristan, unconscious, lies on a couch in the yard of his castle in Bretagne, whither his attendant, Kurwenal, had conveyed him after his affray with Melot. Fearing for Tristan's life, Kurwenal had sent for Isolde. A shepherd has been stationed on the rock to watch for her ship. His melody, at first sad and slow, suddenly becomes agitated, and Kurwenal rushes down to meet Isolde. While he is away the delirious Tristan tears away his bandage. Isolde arrives just in time to catch his body in her arms. Suddenly the shepherd announces the arrival of another ship with the King and followers. Kurwenal quickly barricades the door and stabs Melot, but receives a stab in return, and falls dead by Tristan's side. The King, however, having heard from Brangäne of the love-potion, had come not to reclaim his bride but to give her to Tristan. Isolde, bending over Tristan's body, sings her dying-song, called by a French adorer, "the swan-song of love, the marriage of two human souls with the world-soul."

EDWARD A. MORRISON.

Handwriting may often be a safe index to character yet as a rule, it cannot hold good. Byron's hand was a school-boy scrawl. Macaulay's an ungraceful sprawl. Kent's was clerky. Scott's utterly disappointing. Emerson wrote in sprawling and illegible characters. Fenimore Cooper and Dickens wrote in a notoriously bad style, while the Ettrick Shepherd's was called "vile." Horace Greeley's was unreadable to all but one compositor who had made it a specialty, and Napoleon's letters to Josephine were mistaken for maps of war operations. On the other hand, Wellington's writing was clear and noble Washington's firm and dignified, Cromwell's bold and steady. Henry VIII's determined, and Franklin's large and bold. Of literary men—that of Gray's was neat and regular, Leigh Hunt's graceful, Moore's easy, Shakespeare's as remarkable as his poetry, Poe's strikingly beautiful, Tennyson's classic, Longfellow's vigorous and poetic looking; Holmes's graceful and quaint. Landor's bold and vigorous, Pitt's writing was flowing, Gladstone's is neat and regular. Lord Palmerston was a model of penmanship, and Chief-Justice Chase was celebrated for the beauty of his writing. Landor, in his "Imaginary Conversations," makes Aspasia say: "Men may be negligent of their hand-writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life; but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly."

One of the features of the fashionable dinners this season is the new dry wine ("Grand Vin Sec") of Louis Roederer. It is also the proper thing to serve it at the swell weddings.

Early in this century, an Edinborough manager, bringing out "King Lear," hit upon a greatly improved device for making "stage-thunder." He laid a "corduroy" road of parallel timbers across the stage behind the scene, and over these the carpenter was instructed to trundle a wheel-barrow full of nine-pound cannon-balls. The experiment worked with beautiful success, but unfortunately, just as Lear before the scene had worked up to his climax, the carpenter tripped a timber and away went the thunder, following the declivity of the stage towards the front. The scene was powerless to oppose its progress, and quickly went down before the resistless fury of the storm, which next swept on towards the infirm old King, inspiring him with an agility as graceful as it was sudden. Even the dignity of the musicians gave way, and they vaulted with their instruments into the parquet with various degrees of nimbleness, to the accompaniment of crashing glass chimneys and thumping cannon-balls. And in the midst of all this confusion and devastation the author of all the trouble lay prone upon the back of the stage—frightened completely out of the ability to rise.

THE FUTURE OF MUSIC.

Music has a vast future before it. We are only now beginning to find out some of its uses. With the one exception of its obvious and admitted helpfulness, as an adjunct of religious worship, as a vehicle for and incentive of religious feeling, I had almost said that we had as yet discovered none of its uses.

"Music will some day become a powerful and acknowledged therapeutic, and it is one especially appropriate to this excited age. Half our diseases, some physicians say all our diseases, come from disorder of the nerves. How many ills of the mind precede the ills of the body! Boredom makes more patients than fever. Want of interest and excitement, stagnation of the emotional life, or the fatigue of over-wrought emotion, lies at the root of half the ill-health of our young men and women. Can we estimate the power of music to take up that stagnation? Or, again, can we doubt its power to soothe? To recreate an overstrained emotional life by bending the bow the other way?

"Music is not only a body healer it is a mind regulator. The great educational function of music remains almost to be discovered. The future mission of music for the million is Discipline of Emotion.

"Music, in short, is bound, when properly used and understood, to train us in the exercise of our emotions, as the gymnasium trains us in the exercise of our limbs. The Greeks understood both these uses; we probably understand neither."—Dr. Hawels.

BECKMESSER'S LUTE.

Many of those who laugh at Beckmesser's unskilled playing of the lute in Wagner's opera, "Die Meistersinger," probably do not know that this instrument stood in relation to the home music of the seventeenth century very much as the piano does to that of the nineteenth.

There were many varieties of lutes, of which the theorbo was the largest. In shape somewhat like a guitar; the lute differed from this instrument in having twenty-four strings, of which ten were never to be stopped, but were always played as open strings, and therefore had to be tuned over each time that a new key was used.

It was this constant necessity of retuning which drove the lute out of use. Mattheson, the contemporary of Handel, wittily estimates that, if a lutist lived up to the age of eighty, he had spent sixty years in tuning his instrument. The lute was sweeter-toned than the guitar, and was equally adapted for accompany song or for purely instrumental passages. Its tone was not unlike that of the zither.

The rise of the more easily tuned guitar, and the perfecting of the various keyed instruments drove the lute into oblivion. Yet it died hard; for we find Bach writing for it, and, even in the time of Mozart, composers for the instrument existed, and the lute still furnished the music of many a German household.

"Tristan und Isolde."

I. Akt.—Der Ritter Tristan ist von Kornwall nach Irland geschickt worden um die Prinzessin Isolde als Braut für seinen Oheim, König Marke, zu überführen. Isolde aber liebt Tristan und er liebt sie. Er bleibt jedoch ferne von ihr während der Reise, wie es die ritterlichen Gesetze von einem Brautwerber forderten. Isolde fühlt sich durch diese Vermachlässigung beleidigt, und schickt ihre Begleiterin, Brangäne, hinunter um ein Giftfläschchen heraufzuholen. Dann gießt sie den Inhalt in einen Becher, lässt Tristan holen, und fordert ihn auf zu trinken; doch ehe er damit fertig ist reisst sie den Becher aus seiner Hand und trinkt den Rest. Brangäne hatte ihr aber statt des Giftes einen Liebes Trank gegeben; und durch diesen Trank entbrannt nun die Leidenschaft der Liebenden allmälig, bis sie, alles vergessend, sich feurig umarmen. In diesem Augenblick kündigt der Matrosenchor die Ankunft des Schiffes in Kornwall an. Der König kommt seiner Braut entgegen.

II. Akt.—Garten neben Isolden's Gemach. Eine Fackel brennt neben die Thüre, dessen Erloschung dem Tristan anzeigen soll dass alles sicher ist für eine geheime Zusammenkunft. Man hört Waldhörner, die sich allmälich entfernen, als Zeichen dass der König auf die Jagd gegangen ist, Dies ist aber nur eine List um die Liebenden zu täuschen. Denn Melot, ein Höfling, eifersüchtig auf Tristan, hatte den König gewarnt, Brangäne erräth die List, aber Isolde hört nicht auf sie, sondern löscht die Fackel, worauf Tristan erscheint. Grosses Liebesduett. Plötzlich erscheint der König mit seinen Gefährten. Der König macht Tristan bittere Vorwürfe, aber war gekommen nicht um seine Braut zurückzuholen sondern um sie dem Tristan zu geben; denn Brangäne hatte ihm das Geheimniss des Liebestrank mitgetheilt. Isolde singt sterbend den "Liebestod"—"Das Schwanenlied der Liebe, die Vermählung zweier verschwisterten Seelen mit der Weltseele."

WAGNER'S "MEISTERSINGER."

Wagner's "Meistersinger" is conspicuous among all his works as being his only comic opera. Satiric opera would, perhaps, be a better term; for it is not comic exactly in the sense in which the operas of Mozart, Rossini and Auber are comic. The humor is essentially German—a combination of playfulness, exuberant animal spirits, practical jokes, satire, burlesque, and withal an under-current of seriousness and even sadness, as is the case with all the best humorous literature.

What makes the satire in the "Meistersinger" the more interesting, is the fact that it has a biographic significance. The opera is, in fact, a musical autobiography—a sketch of Wagner's own life and struggles with his critics and public opinion. Walter, the hero of the opera, with his novel melody that violates the pedantic rules of the master-singers, represents the "music of the future"; Beckmesser represents the malicious and narrow-minded critics, who can see no good in anything that is new in art; and the poet, Hans Sachs, represents enlightened public opinion, always ready to appreciate a genius in advance of his professional colleagues Wagner also burlesques in a very droll manner some of those features of the old-fashioned operatic style, which are now generally admitted to be undramatic and absurd.

Each of Wagner's operas is so novel in subject and musical ideas, that, on hearing one after the other, one might imagine himself transferred to a new world of sounds. But between none of his operas are the differences so great as between "Tristan and Isolde" and "Die Meistersinger,' though they were composed in immediate succession, "Tristan" is like a rapturous nocturne in the tropics, "Die Meistersinger" like a festival day in the bracing, cheerful atmosphere of the north. It contains some of the finest choruses ever written—especially in the third act; besides lyric pieces, processions, and even a waltz; and the whole opera gives a most striking and realistic picture of quaint mediæval life in Germany.

It was Wagner's own opinion that "Die Meistersinger," more than any other work of his, would appeal to non-German audiences.

"Die Meistersinger," though it contains so many elements of popularity, is one of Wagner's most mature works. It was composed just after "Tristan," which he himself regarded as the nearest approach to his ideal of the music-drama, and which itself followed "Rheingold" and "Die Walkure," the first two volumes of the Nibelung Tetrology. The first sketch of the plot of "Die Meistersinger," however, belongs to a much earlier period, having been made even before the composition of "Lohengrin." Immediately after completing the score of "Tannhäuser," Wagner visited one of the Bohemian summer resorts, and there, partly urged by friends, who desired him to try his powers in some other than the tragic fields, originated the idea of writing a comic opera, a sequel to "Tannhäuser" (which also deals with a vocal prize contest), just as among the Greeks a satire-play was wont to follow the performance of a tragedy.

"Die Meistersinger" and "Rienzi" are Wagner's only operas that are based on historical instead of mythological subjects.

SCHUMANN ON WAGNER.

Wagner's "Tannhäuser" is at present one of the most popular works in the operatic repertory, not only in Germany, but in this country, and even in Spain and Italy. But when it was first produced it was almost unanimously denounced by the critics, including even so liberal a man as Schumann. In the second volume of Schumann's Letters, issued only a few weeks ago by a Leipzig publisher, occurs the following astounding passage in a letter to Mendelssohn, dated Oct. 22, 1845:

"Wagner has just finished a new opera—no doubt a clever fellow, full of eccentric notions, and bold beyond measure—the aristocracy is still in raptures over him on account of his "Rienzi," but in reality he cannot conceive or write four consecutive bars of good or even correct music. What all these composers lack is the art of writing pure harmonies and four-part choruses.

The music is not a straw better than that of "Rienzi," rather weaker, more artificial! But if I should write this I would be accused of envy, hence I say it only to you, as I am aware that you have known all this a long time."

Three weeks later, however, Schumann again wrote to Mendelssohn: "I must take back much of what I wrote regarding "Tannhäuser," after reading the score; on the stage the effect is quite different. I was deeply moved by many parts."

Two months after this (Jan. 7, 1846) he wrote to H. Dorn: "I wish you could see Wagner's 'Tannhäuser.'" It contains profound and original ideas, and is a hundred times better than his previous operas, though some of the music is trivial. In a word he may become of great importance to the stage, and so far as I know him, he has the requisite courage. The technical part, the instrumentation, I find excellent, incomparably more masterly than formerly. He has already finished a text, called 'Lohengrin.'"

In another letter to Mendelssohn, Schumann writes: "Wagner surprised us yesterday by showing us his new opera book, 'Lohengrin.' In my case the surprise was double, for I have had in my mind for a year the same subject, or a similar one of the time of the Round Table, and now I shall have to throw it away. Most of those present were exceptionally pleased with the text, especially the painters.

"If the most exquisite orchestral music could be continued without a pause for a series of years, and children were brought up and educated in the room in which it was perpetually resounding, I believe their enjoyment of music, or understanding of it, would be very small."—Ruskin.

A young composer once wrote to Rossini, asking his advice as to the best method of composing an overture. Here is a portion of the answer: "Wait till the evening before the first performance, for nothing excites inspiration like necessity, the presence of a copyist waiting for your work, and the view of a manager in despair tearing out his hair by handfuls. In Italy, in my time, all the managers were bald at thirty.

"I composed the Overture to "Othello" in a small room in the Barbaja Palace where the baldest and most ferocious of managers had shut me up by force, with nothing but a dish of macaroni and the threat that I should not leave the place alive, until I had written the last note. I wrote the Overture to "Gazza Ladra" on the day of the first performance, in an upper loft of the Scala, where I had been confined by the manager under the guard of four scene-shifters, who had orders to throw my text out of the window bit by bit to the copyists who were waiting below to transcribe it. In default of the music I was to be thrown out. For Barbiere I did better. I composed no Overture but tacked on one intended for a very serious work called Elizabetta. The public were delighted. I composed the Overture to Count Ory, while angling, with my feet in the water and in the company of M. Aguado, who was talking Spanish finance all the time. That of "Gillaume Tell" was written under some what similar circumstances," etc. This may be very well for a Rossini, but would be rather a dangerous experiment to recommen das general adaice.

Shakespeare's insight into the function of music ranks him above all other poets. He knows that music "charmeth sleep," "killing care and grief of heart"; it "hath helped madmen to their wits," and "will make wise men mad." "I never heard so musical a discord, such sweet thunder," might be used as a text for a chapter on modern dramatic music.

WHAT IS "TONE-CCLOR?"

Professor Helmholtz has proved that, just as white is not a simple color, but a combination of all the hues of the rainbow, so any single tone produced by the voice or a musical instrument is not simple, but contains, besides the fundamenta tone which the ordinary listener alone hears, several "partial" or "overtones," which blend so closely with the fundamental tone that it takes a very delicate ear and close attention to distinguish them.

Were it not for these overtones all instruments would sound alike, and music would lose all its charms of "color."

For the fundamental tones of voices and instruments are identical, and the only thing that enables a musician to tell at a distance whether a given note proceeds from a piano, voice, or violin, is the presence of these overtones, which vary in their number, relative loudness, and pitch, thus giving rise to the differences of quality or timbre in instruments.

TO BE BEAUTIFUL YOU MUST HAVE PEARLY-WHITE TEETH. Adams' Tutti Frutti Chewing Gum beautifies the teeth and preserves them.

How little we think of all that is involved in the beautiful laces which delight our eyes and make light our purses! Sometimes a fine piece of Brussels lace requires the work of seven persons. The thread used is so delicate that it must be spun in damp unhealthy cellars to keep it from separating and becoming unmanageable. This is at a cost of human life! A piece of Valenciennes not two inches wide requires about 300 bobbins, while many patterns need 800.

WHY MOZART WAS POOR.

There was not the famous ingratitude of people who will not recognize a prophet in his own country; there was not a complicated intrigue of powerful enemies, for he had lots of friends. It was solely his inability to recognize the practical side of life, and to use his friends' advice properly. It is all very fine to say a lofty genius like that thinks only of creating immortal works; what does he know, and how can he be disposed to think of butcher and baker? Charming! But so long as a genius is bound to inhabit a machine whose texture wants daily keeping up by what must be bought from baker and butcher, and so long as interruption of this thoroughly prosaic proceeding has the effect of destroying the very brain which is the seat of the genius, so long will the "lofty purpose" be dragged down, as it were, with heavy, but not-to-be-got-rid-of weights, and there is no choice left but to pay the penalty. In life everything is a bargain. You want to be romantic, to run out in the moonshine, dream of her and sigh to the clouds? Do, by all means. Only next morning you will sneeze, have a headache, and wish the moon and the clouds anywhere. You have had your pleasure—pay for it.—Louis Engel's Reminiscences.

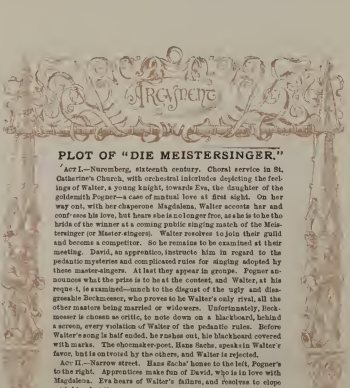
One of the features of the fashionable dinners this season is the new dry wine ("Grand Vin Sec") of Louis Roederer. It is also the proper thing to serve it at the swell weddings.

Early in this century, an Edinborough manager, bringing out "King Lear," hit upon a greatly improved device for making "stage-thunder." He laid a "corduroy" road of parallel timbers across the stage behind the scene, and over these the carpenter was instructed to trundle a wheel-barrow full of nine-pound cannon-balls. The experiment worked with beautiful success, but unfortunately, just as Lear before the scene had worked up to his climax, the carpenter tripped a timber and away went the cargo, following the declivity of the stage towards the front. The scene was powerless to oppose its progress, and quickly went down before the resistless fury of the storm, which next swept on towards the infirm old King, inspiring him with an agility as graceful as it was sudden. Even the dignity of the musicians gave way, and they vaulted with their instruments into the parquet with various degrees of nimbleness, to the accompaniment of crashing glass chimneys and thumping cannon-balls. And in the midst of all this confusion and devastation the author of all the trouble lay prone upon the back of the stage—frightened completely out of the ability to rise.

PRIESTLEY'S CAMEL-HAIR FABRICS
Include a complete line of Camel-hair cloths, both for costumes and wraps of extra quality; the real India cloth, uniting the camel-hair effect with the graceful folds of India draperies; and the new silk warp diagonals and serges, the softest and most luxurious of materials, yet firm in texture. They are equally suitable for wear in and out of mourning. None genuine unless rolled on a "Varnished Board," showing the grain of the wood, which is the Priestley Trade-Mark. They are for sale by Lord & Taylor, Stern Bros., Jackson's Mourning Store, B. Altman & Co., Simpson, Crawford & Simpson, Le Boutillier Bros., H. O'Neill & Co., and others, and by all the principal dealers in the large cities.



PLOT OF "DIE MEISTERSINGER."

ACT I.—Nuremberg, sixteenth century. Choral service in St. Catharine's Church, with orchestral interludes depicting the feelings of Walter, a young knight, towards Eva, the daughter of the goldsmith Pogner—a case of mutual love at first sight. On her way out, with her chaperone Magdalena, Walter accosts her and confesses his love, but fears she is no longer free, as she is to be the bride of the winner at a coming public singing match of the Meistersinger (or Master-singers). Walter resolves to join their guild and become a competitor. So he remains to be examined at their meeting. David, an apprentice, instructs him in regard to the pedantic mysteries and complicated rules for singing adopted by these master-singers. At last they appear in groups. Pogner announces what the prize is to be at the contest, and Walter, at his request, is examined—much to the disgust of the ugly and disagreeable Beckmesser, who proves to be Walter's only rival, all the other masters being married or widowers. Unfortunately, Beckmesser is chosen as critic, to note down on a blackboard, behind a screen, every violation of Walter of the pedantic rules. Before Walter's song is half ended, he rushes out, his blackboard covered with marks. The shoemaker-poet, Hans Sachs, speaks in Walter's favor, but is outvoted by the others, and Walter is rejected.

ACT II.—Narrow street. Hans Sachs' house to the left, Pogner's to the right. Apprentices make fun of David, who is in love with Magdalena. Eva hears of Walter's failure, and resolves to elope with him, but the appearance of the watchman compels them to hide. Once more they start, when the sound of a lute is heard. Beckmesser has come to serenade Eva, to whom Sachs, who wish s to prevent the elopement, moves out his bench, hammers away at a shoe, and sings humorous songs, constantly interrupting the angry Beckmesser's serenade. David comes out, and seeing the disguised Magdalena at the window listening to the serenade intended for Eva, becomes jealous, and unmercifully beats Beckmesser. The tumult awakens all the neighbors, who rush into the street and join in the fight, till suddenly the watchman's horn is heard again, and all disperse.

ACT III.—Hans Sachs in his room reading and philosophizing. David comes in, sings a charming song about St. John, and leaves. Walter, who, on account of the frustrated elopement, had spent the night with Sachs, comes down and tells of a wonderful dream he had—the melody of the well-known prize-song. Sachs notes it down on paper. They leave; Beckmesser sneaks in and steals the song, thinking it is by the famous Sachs, and hoping to win the prize with it. Eva comes in to have her shoe fitted. Some ends with the famous quintette. Last scene: a meadow with city of Nuremberg in background. Popular festival, singing and dancing. Comic choruses of shoemakers, tailors and bakers. Grand procession of master-singers. Prize contest. Beckmesser sings first, but gets confused and sings amazing nonsense, until his voice is drowned by laughter. Sachs proposes that anyone who can properly sing that song, Sachs not a member of the Trade Union, shall get the prize. All agree; Walter steps forward, sings it, and wins the bride.

Handwriting may often be a safe index to character yet as a rule, it cannot hold good. Byron's hand was a school-boy scrawl, Macaulay's an ungraceful sprawl. Keat's was clerky, Scott's utterly disappointing. Emerson wrote in sprawling and illegible characters. Fenimore Cooper and Dickens wrote in a notoriously bad style, while the Ettrick Shepherd's was called "vile." Horace Greeley's was unreadable to all but one compositor who had made it a specialty, and Napoleon's letters to Josephine were mistaken for maps of war operations. On the other hand, Wellington's writing was clear and noble Washington's firm and dignified, Cromwell's bold and steady, Henry VIII's determined, and Franklin's large and bold. Of literary men—that of Gray's was neat and regular, Leigh Hunt's graceful, Moore's easy, Shakespeare's as remarkable as his poetry, Poe's strikingly beautiful, Tennyson's classic, Longfellow's vigorous and poetic looking; Holmes's graceful and quaint, Landor's bold and vigorous, Pitt's writing was flowing, Gladstone's is neat and regular, Lord Palmerston was a model of penmanship, and Chief-Justice Chase was celebrated for the beauty of his writing. Landor, in his "Imaginary Conversations," makes Aspasia say: "Men may be negligent of their hand-writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life; but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly."

THE FUTURE OF MUSIC.

"Music has a vast future before it. We are only now beginning to find out some of its uses. With the one exception of its obvious and admitted helpfulness, as an adjunct of religious worship, as a vehicle for and incentive of religious feeling, I had almost said that we had as yet discovered none of its uses.

"Music will some day become a powerful and acknowledged therapeutic, and it is one especially appropriate to this excited age. Half our diseases, some physicians say all our diseases, come from disorder of the nerves. How many ills of the mind precede the ills of the body! Boredom makes patients this day clever. Want of interest and excitement, stagnation of the emotional life, or the fatigue of over-wrought emotion, lies at the root of half the ill-health of our young men and women. Can we doubt the power of music to break up that stagnation? Or, again, can we doubt its power to soothe? To recreate an overstrained emotional life by bending the bow the other way?

"Music is not only a body healer; it is a mind regulator. The great educational function of music remains almost to be discovered. The fearless instruction of music for the million is Discipline of Emotion.

"Music, in short, is bound, when properly used and understood, to train us in the exercise of our emotions, as the gymnasium trains us in the exercise of our limbs. The Greeks understood both these uses; we probably understand neither,"—Dr. Hawis.

BECKMESSER'S LUTE.

Many of those who laugh at Beckmesser's unskilled playing of the lute in Wagner's opera, "Die Meistersinger," probably do not know that this instrument stood in relation to the home music of the seventeenth century very much as the piano does to that of the nineteenth.

There were many varieties of lutes, of which the theorbo was the largest. In shape somewhat like a guitar; the lute differed from this instrument in having twenty-four strings, of which ten were never to be stopped, but were always played as open strings, and therefore had to be tuned over each time that a new key was used.

It was this constant necessity of retuning which drove the lute out of use. Mattheson, the contemporary of Handel, wittily estimates that, if a lutist lived up to the age of eighty, he had spent sixty years in tuning his instrument. The lute was sweeter-toned than the guitar, and was equally adapted for accompany song or for purely instrumental passages. Its tone was not unlike that of the zither.

The rise of the more easily tuned guitar, and the perfecting of the various keyed instruments drove the lute into oblivion. Yet it died hard; for we find Bach writing for it, and, even in the time of Mozart, composers for the instrument existed, and the lute still furnished the music of many a German household.

"DIE MEISTERSINGER."

I. ACT.—Nürneburg im XVI. Jahrhundert. Choral-gesang in der Kirche. Der Ritter, Walter von Stolzing, verliebt sich in Eva, Tochter des Goldschmied's Pogner. Er bekennt ihr seine Liebe während sie mit ihre Amme Magdalene, die Kirche verlassen will, hört aber dass sie nicht mehr ganz frei ist, denn ihr Vater hat ihre Hand demjenigen Meistersinger versprochen, der bei einem kommenden Wettgesang den Preis gewinnen wird. Walter entschliesst sich auch Meistersinger zu werden, und um den Preis zu werben. Er erwartet die Zusammenkunft der Meister, um seine Probe zu bestehen. Inzwischen weilt ihn Lehrjunge David in die complicirten Regeln des Gesanges ein. Die Meister erscheinen, Pogner kündigt an worin der Preis besteht, und Walter wird zum Examen zugelassen. Unglücklicherweise wird der häuslichs und weltliche Beckmesser, der auch um den Preis singen will, als "Merker" gewählt, und sechnet nun hinter einer Vorhang, alle die "Fehler" im Walter's Gesang gerächschrift auf ein schwarzes Brett. Als es voll ist, stürzt er hervor, und die Meister erklären dass Walter nicht aufgenommen werden könne, obwohl der Dichter und Schuster Hans Sachs ihn zu vertheidigen sucht.

II. ACT.—Enge Strasse. Hans Sachsen's Haus zur linken, Pogner's zur rechten Seite. Lehrjungen machen sich über David lustig, der in Magdalene verliebt ist. Eva hört von Sachs dass Walter Fiasco gemacht hat, und entschliesst sich nun mit ihm zu entfliehen; doch der Nachtwächter mit seinem Horn erscheint, und verhindert das Vorhaben. Ein zweiter Versuch wird verhindert durch Eva Erscheinen Beckmesser, der mit seiner Laute Eva ein Ständchen bringen will. Zur selben Zeit bringt Sachs seine Schusterbank heraus und singt humoristische Lieder, zum grossen Aergernise Beckmesser's. David erscheint, und sieht Magdalene am Fenster als Eva verkleidet, und der Serenade lauschend. Eifersüchtig greift er Beckmesser an. Grosser Tumult; die Nachbarn eilen herbei, und eine allgemeine Prügelei folgt, bis den Nachtwächter's Horn alle zerstreut. Der Nachtwächter schreitet furchtsam über die Bühne.

III. ACT.—Hans Sachs philosophirt. David erscheint und hittet um Verzeihung für den Tumult, Dann kommt Walter, den Sachs nach der misglückten Entführung in sein Haus genommen hatte. Er erzählt seinen Traum—der Melodie des Preisliedes—und Sachs schreibt sie auf. Beckmesser schleicht herbei, sieht das Lied und steckt es zu sich, da er glaubt es sei ein neues Lied von Sachs, mit dem er den Preis gewinnen könne. Eva kommt um ihre Schuhe anzuprobiren. Grosses Quintet. Scenenwechsel. Wiese vor Nürenberg. Volksfest. Komische Chore der Schuster, Schneider und Bäcker. Zug der Meistersinger. Beckmesser besteigt das Podium, und versucht das gestohlene Lied zu singen, verstummelt es aber entsetzlich und wird angelacht. Nun singt er Walter correct, und wird darauf als Meistersinger ernannt, und gewinnt Eva's Hand.

At a recent sale of autographs in Berlin, those known to be Richard Wagner's brought the highest prices. His Essay on Meyerbeer lately found—its which he expresses great admiration for the composer, sold for 640 marks, and one of his own compositions brought 960 marks. Letters to Laube, Meyerbeer and others ranged from 70 to 120 marks. A fragment of Wagner's diary, kept while in Paris sold for 115 marks. Two of Chopin's polonaises went for 400 marks.

WAGNER'S "MEISTERSINGER."

Wagner's "Meistersinger" is conspicuous among all his works as being his only comic opera. Satiric opera would, perhaps, be a better term; for it is not comic exactly in the sense in which the operas of Mozart, Rossini and Auber are comic. The humor is essentially German—a combination of playfulness, exuberant animal spirits, practical jokes, satire, burlesque, and withal an under-current of seriousness and even sadness, as is the case with all the best humorous literature.

What makes the satire in the "Meistersinger" the more interesting, is the fact that it has a biographic significance. The opera is, in fact, a musical autobiography—a sketch of Wagner's own life and struggles with his critics and public opinion. Walter, the hero of the opera, with his novel melody that violates the pedantic rules of the master-singers, represents the "music of the future"; Beckmesser represents the malicious and narrow-minded critics, who can see no good in anything that is new in art; and the poet, Hans Sachs, represents enlightened public opinion, always ready to appreciate a genius in advance of his professional colleagues. Wagner also burlesques in a very droll manner some of those features of the old-fashioned operatic style, which are now generally admitted to be undramatic and absurd.

Each of Wagner's operas is so novel in subject and musical ideas, that, on hearing one after the other, one might imagine himself transferred to a new world of sounds. But between none of his operas are the differences so great as between "Tristan and Isolde" and "Die Meistersinger," though they were composed in immediate succession, "Tristan" is like a rapturous nocturne in the tropics, "Die Meistersinger" like a festival day in the bracing, cheerful atmosphere of the north. It contains some of the finest choruses ever written—especially in the third act; besides lyric pieces, processions, and even a waltz; and the whole opera gives a most striking and realistic picture of quaint mediæval life in Germany.

It was Wagner's own opinion that "Die Meistersinger," more than any other work of his, would appeal to non-German audiences.

"Die Meistersinger," though it contains so many elements of popularity, is one of Wagner's most mature works. It was composed just after "Tristan," which he himself regarded as the nearest approach to his ideal of the music-drama, and which itself followed "Rheingold" and "Die Walkure," the first two volumes of the Nibelung Tetrology. The first sketch of the plot of "Die Meistersinger," however, belongs to a much earlier period, having been made even before the composition of "Lohengrin." Immediately after completing the score of "Tannhäuser," Wagner visited one of the Bohemian summer resorts, and there, partly urged by friends, who desired him to try his powers in some other than the tragic fields, originated the idea of writing a comic opera, a sequel to "Tannhäuser" (which also deals with a vocal prize contest), just as among the Greeks a satire-play was wont to follow the performance of a tragedy.

"Die Meistersinger" and "Rienzi" are Wagner's only operas that are based on historical instead of mythological subjects.

SCHUMANN ON WAGNER.

Wagner's "Tannhäuser" is at present one of the most popular works in the operatic repertory, not only in Germany, but in this country, and even in Spain and Italy. But when it was first produced it was almost unanimously denounced by the critics, including even so liberal a man as Schumann. In the second volume of Schumann's Letters, issued only a few weeks ago by a Leipzig publisher, occurs the following astounding passage in a letter to Mendelssohn, dated Oct. 22, 1845:

"Wagner has just finished a new opera—no doubt a clever fellow, full of eccentric notions, and bold beyond measure—the aristocracy is still in raptures over him on account of his "Rienzi," but in reality he cannot conceive or write four consecutive bars of good or even correct music. What all these composers lack is the art of writing pure harmonies and four-part choruses.

The music is not a straw better than that of "Rienzi," rather weaker, more artificial! But if I should write this I would be accused of envy, hence I say it only to you, as I am aware that you have known all this a long time."

Three weeks later, however, Schumann again wrote to Mendelssohn: "I must take back much of what I wrote regarding "Tannhäuser," after reading the score; on the stage the effect is quite different. I was deeply moved by many parts."

Two months after this (Jan. 7, 1846) he wrote to H. Dorn: "I wish you could see Wagner's 'Tannhäuser.'" It contains profound and original ideas, and is a hundred times better than his previous operas, though some of the music is trivial. In a word he may become of great importance to the stage, and so far as I know him, he has the requisite courage. The technical part, the instrumentation, I find excellent, incomparably more masterly than formerly. He has already finished a text, called 'Lohengrin.'"

In another letter to Mendelssohn, Schumann writes: "Wagner surprised us yesterday by showing us his new opera book, 'Lohengrin.' In my case the surprise was double, for I have had in my mind for a year the same subject, or a similar one of the time of the Round Table, and now I shall have to throw it away. Most of those present were exceptionally pleased with the text, especially the painters.

"If the most exquisite orchestral music could be continued without a pause for a series of years, and children were brought up and educated in the room in which it was perpetually resounding, I believe their enjoyment of music, or understanding of it, would be very small."—Ruthin.

A young composer once wrote to Rossini, asking his advice as to the best method of composing an overture. Here is a portion of the answer: "Wait till the evening before the first performance, for nothing excites inspiration like necessity, the presence of a copyist waiting for your work, and the view of a manager in despair tearing out his hair by handfuls. In Italy, in my time, all the managers were bald at thirty.

"I composed the Overture to "Othello" in a small room in the Barbaja Palace where the baldest and most ferocious of managers had shut me up by force, with nothing but a dish of macaroni and the threat that I should not leave the place alive, until I had written the last note. I wrote the Overture to "Gazza Ladra" on the day of the first performance, in an upper loft of the Scala, where I had been confined by the manager under the guard of four scene-shifters, who had orders to throw my text out of the window bit by bit to the copyists who were waiting below to transcribe it. In default of the music I was to be thrown out. For Barbiere I did better. I composed no Overture but tacked on one intended for a very serious work called Elizabetta. The public were delighted. I composed the Overture to Count Ory, while angling with my feet in the water and in the company of M. Aguado, who was talking Spanish finance all the time. That of "Gillaume Tell" was written under some what similar circumstances," etc. This may be very well for a Rossini, but would be rather a dangerous experiment to recommen das general advice.

Shakespeare's insight into the function of music ranks him above all other poets. He knows that music "charmeth sleep," "killing care and grief of heart"; it "hath helped madmen to their wits," and "will make wise men mad." "I never heard so musical a discord, such sweet thunder," might be used as a text for a chapter on modern dramatic music.

WHAT IS "TONE-COLOR?"

Professor Helmholtz has proved that, just as white is not a simple color, but a combination of all the hues of the rainbow, so any single tone produced by the voice or a musical instrument is not simple, but contains, besides the fundamental tone which the ordinary listener alone hears, several "partial" or "overtones," which blend so closely with the fundamental tone that it takes a very delicate ear and close at tention to distinguish them.

Were it not for these overtones all instruments would sound alike, and music would lose all its charms of 'color."

For the fundamental tones of voices and instruments are identical, and the only thing that enables a musician to tell at a distance whether a given note proceeds from a piano, voice, or violin, is the presence of these overtones, which vary in their number, relative loudness, and pitch, thus giving rise to the differences of quality or timbre in instruments.

How little we think of all that is involved in the beautiful laces which delight our eyes and make light our purses! Sometimes a fine piece of Brussels lace requires the work of seven persons. The thread used is so delicate that it must be spun in damp unhealthy cellars to keep it from separating and becoming unmanageable. This is at a cost of human life! A piece of Valenciennes not two inches wide requires about 300 bobbins, while many patterns need 800.

WHY MOZART WAS POOR.

There was not the famous ingratitude of people who will not recognize a prophet in his own country; there was not a complicated intrigue of powerful enemies for he had lots of friends. It was solely his inability to recognize the practical side of life, and to use his friends' advice properly. It is all very fine to say a lofty genius like that thinks only of creating immortal works; what does he know, and how can he be disposed to think of butcher and baker? Charming! But so long as a genius is bound to inhabit a machine whose texture wants daily keeping up by what must be bought from baker and butcher, and so long as interruption of this thoroughly prosaic proceeding has the effect of destroying the very brain which is the seat of the genius, so long will the "lofty purpose" be dragged down, as it were, with heavy, but not-to-be-got-rid-of weights, and there is no choice left but to pay the penalty. In life everything is a bargain. You want to be romantic, to run out in the moonshine, dream of her and sigh to the clouds? Do, by all means. Only next morning you will sneeze, have a headache, and wish the moon and the clouds anywhere. You have had your pleasure—pay for it.—Louis Engel's Reminiscences.

One of the features of the fashionable dinners this season is the new dry wine ("Grand Vin Sec") of Louis Roederer. It is also the proper thing to serve it at the swell weddings.

Early in this century, an Edinborough manager, bringing out "King Lear," hit upon a greatly improved device for making "stage-thunder." He laid a "corduroy" road of parallel timbers across the stage behind the scene, and over these the carpenter was instructed to trundle a wheel-barrow full of nine-pound cannon-balls. The experiment worked with beautiful success, but unfortunately, just as Lear before the scene had worked up to his climax, the carpenter tripped a timber and away went the thunder, following the declivity of the stage towards the front. The scene was powerless to oppose its progress, and quickly went down before the resistless fury of the storm, which next swept on towards the infirm old King, inspiring him with an agility as graceful as it was sudden. Even the dignity of the musicians gave way, and they vaulted with their instruments into the parquet with various degrees of nimbleness, to the accompaniment of crashing glass chimneys and thumping cannon-balls. And in the midst of all this confusion and devastation the author of all the trouble lay prone upon the back of the stage—frightened completely out of the ability to rise.

The Story of Lohengrin.

ACT I.—The rising curtain reveals a meadow near Antwerp, on which King Henry has assembled the nobles of Brabant. Count Telramund, whose offer of marriage has been refused by Elsa, Princess of Brabant, seeks to avenge himself by accusing her of having murdered her younger brother, in order that she might share the rule of the country with a secret lover. Elsa appears before the King, declares her innocence, and tells of a vision in which a knight appeared to her, promising to be her champion. The Herald's first call for her knight remains unanswered, but after the second a knight appears on a boat drawn by a swan. After making Elsa promise never to ask him who he is or whence he came, he vanquishes Telramund, but generously spares his life.

ACT II.—Telramund and his wife Ortrud are before the palace. The two plot revenge, and Ortrud, who is a witch, knows that if she can induce Elsa to ask Lohengrin the forbidden question, he will have to leave her. So when Elsa is about to enter the church, she takes her aside, and hints that Lohengrin is a sorcerer. Subsequently Telramund interrupts the bridal pair and accuses Lohengrin of witchcraft, but is obliged to yield to the popular indignation, and the bridal procession moves on.

ACT III.—The scene at the opening of Act III. represents the bridal chamber. The evil insinuations of Ortrud leave Elsa no peace, and, notwithstanding her husband's warning, she yields to her anxious curiosity and asks the fatal question about his name and home. Shortly has she uttered these words, when Telramund rushes in to assassinate Lohengrin, who, however, passes his own sword through his enemy. The scene changes to the same meadow seen in Act I. The body of Telramund is brought before the King and Lohengrin announces that he is obliged to depart, and that he is one of the knights of the Holy Grail whose mission is to assist innocent mortals in distress, but who can only do so on condition of concealing their origin. The swan now arrives to take him away, when Ortrud advances and announces that the swan is no one else than Elsa's brother, converted by Ortrud's magic arts into a swan. Lohengrin's prayer changes him back to human form, and a dove having taken its place, the knight departs.

893 BROADWAY,
13 EAST 19th STREET.
EDWARD A. MORRISON.

Handwriting may often be a safe index to character yet as a rule, it cannot hold good. Byron's hand was a school-boy scrawl, Macaulay's an ungraceful sprawl. Keat's was clerky, Scott's utterly disappointing. Emerson wrote in sprawling and illegible characters. Fenimore Cooper and Dickens wrote in a notoriously bad style, while the Ettrick Shepherd's was called "vile." Horace Greeley's was unreadable to all but one compositor who had made it a specialty, and Napoleon's letters to Josephine were mistaken for maps of war operations. On the other hand, Wellington's writing was clear and noble Washington's firm and dignified, Cromwell's bold and steady, Henry VIII's determined, and Franklin's large and bold. Of literary men—that of Gray's was neat and regular, Leigh Hunt's graceful, Moore's easy, Shakespeare's as remarkable as his poetry, Poe's strikingly beautiful, Tennyson's classic, Longfellow's vigorous and poetic looking; Holmes's graceful and quaint, Landor's bold and vigorous, Pitt's writing was flowing, Gladstone's is neat and regular. Lord Palmerston was a model of penmanship, and Chief-Justice Chase was celebrated for the beauty of his writing. Landor, in his "Imaginary Conversations," makes Aspasia say: "Men may be negligent of their hand-writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life; but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly."

THE FUTURE OF MUSIC.

"Music has a vast future before it. We are only now beginning to find out some of its uses. With the one exception of its obvious and admitted helpfulness, as an adjunct of religious worship, as a vehicle for and incentive of religious feeling, I had almost said that we had as yet discovered none of its uses.

"Music will some day become a powerful and acknowledged therapeutic, and it is one especially appropriate to this excited age. Half our diseases, some physicians say all our diseases, come from disorder of the nerves. How many ills of the mind precede the ills of the body! Boredom makes more patients than fever. Want of interest and excitement, stagnation of the emotional life, or the fatigue of over-wrought emotion, lies at the root of half the ill-health of our young men and women. Can we doubt the power of music to break up that stagnation? Or, again, can we douht its power to soothe? To recreate an overstrained emotional life by bending the bow the other way?

"Music is not only a body healer; it is a mind regulator. The great educational function of music remains almost to be discovered. The future mission of music for the million is Discipline of Emotion.

"Music, in short, is bound, when properly used and understood, to train us in the exercise of our emotions, as the gymnasium trains us in the exercise of our limbs. The Greeks understood both these uses: we probably understand neither."—Dr. Hawis.

BECKMESSER'S LUTE.

Many of those who laugh at Beckmesser's unskilled playing of the lute in Wagner's opera, "Die Meistersinger," probably do not know that this instrument stood in relation to the home music of the seventeenth century very much as the piano does to that of the nineteenth.

There were many varieties of lutes, of which the theorbo was the largest. In shape somewhat like a guitar; the lute differed from this instrument in having twenty-four strings, of which ten were never to be stopped, but were always played as open strings, and therefore had to be tuned over each time that a new key was used.

It was this constant necessity of retuning which drove the lute out of use. Mattheson, the contemporary of Handel, wittily estimates that, if a lutist lived up to the age of eighty, he had spent sixty years in tuning his instrument. The lute was sweeter-toned than the guitar, and was equally adapted for accompany song or for purely instrumental passages. Its tone was not unlike that of the zither.

The rise of the more easily tuned guitar, and the perfecting of the various keyed instruments drove the lute into oblivion. Yet it died hard; for we find Bach writing for it, and, even in the time of Mozart, composers for the instrument existed, and the lute still furnished the music of many a German household.

Lohengrin.

I. AKT.—König Heinrich I. kommt auf der Runde durch die Deutschen Herzogthümer um die Ritter zum Krieg gegen die Ungarn aufzufordern, auch nach Brabant, wo Graf Friedrich von Telramund für den unmündigen Gottfried das Herzogthum verwaltet. Telramund tritt auf, klagt Elsa, Gottfried's Schwester, des Bruderwordes an, da seit einiger Zeit Gottfried verschwunden sei, und fordert für sich das Herzogthum. Der König fordert Elsa auf sich zu verthidigen. Elsa betet dass Gott ihr den Ritter sende der ihr im Traume erschien; er solle für sie streiten und zum Lohn ihre Hand und das Herzogthum erhalten. Als der Herrufer zweimal gerufen hatte, erscheint der Ritter (Lohengrin) im Schwanenschiff. Ehe er kämpft muss sie ihm versprechen nie zu fragen wer und woher er sei, weil er sie sonst verlassen müsse. Zweikampf. Telramund fällt, aber Lohengrin schenkt ihm das Leben.

II. AKT.—Nacht. Telramund und seine Frau, Ortrud, sind geächtet und sinnen auf Rache. Elsa erscheint, bemitleidet Ortrud, und nimmt sie bei sich auf. Tagesanbruch. Elsa geht zur Kirche; doch als sie die Stufen betritt springt Ortrud vor, beansprucht den Vortritt, zeiht Lohengrin der Zauberei, und wirft Elsa vor dass sie ja nicht einmal seinem Namen wissen dürfe. Lohengrin und der König erscheinen; da springt Friederich vor, beschuldigt Lohengrin der Zauberei und verlangt dass er seinem Namen nenne. Doch Lohengrin weist ihn ab und der Kirchgang hat nun ungehindert.

III. AKT.—Brautgemach. Kaum sind Lohengrin und Elsa allein als Elsa, trotz Lohengrin's Flehen, Ortrud's Rath folgt und seinen Namen fragt. Da stürzen Telramund und seine Gefährten herein um Lohengrin zu ermorden; er aber erschlagt Telramund. Schlusszene: Lohengrin gibt sich vor dem König, Elsa, und Allen zu erkennen als der Sohn des Graelkonig's Parsifal. Er nimmt von Elsa Abschied, und der Schwan erscheint wieder. Lohengrin kniet und betet, da fliegt eine Taube von Himmel und spannt sich vor den Nachen, während der Schwan sich in Gottfried, Elsa's Bruder, verwandelt; und Ortrud, welche durch Zauber Gottfried in den Schwan verwandelt hatte, sinkt todt zu Boden. Trauernd tritt Lohengrin den Rückweg zum Gral an.

At a recent sale of autographs in Berlin, those known to be Richard Wagner's brought the highest prices. His essay on Meyerbeer—lately found—in which he expresses great admiration for the composer, sold for 640 marks, and one of his own compositions brought 960 marks. Letters to Laube, Meyerbeer and others ranged from 70 to 120 marks. A fragment of Wagner's diary, kept while in Paris, sold for 115 marks. Two of Chopin's polonaises went for 400 marks.

WAGNER'S "MEISTERSINGER."

Wagner's "Meistersinger" is conspicuous among all his works as being his only comic opera. Satiric opera would, perhaps, be a better term; for it is not comic exactly in the sense in which the operas of Mozart, Rossini and Auber are comic. The humor is essentially German—a combination of playfulness, exuberant animal spirits, practical jokes, satire, burlesque, and withal an under-current of seriousness and even sadness, as is the case with all the best humorous literature.

What makes the satire in the "Meistersinger" the more interesting, is the fact that it has a biographic significance. The opera is, in fact, a musical autobiography—a sketch of Wagner's own life and struggles with his critics and public opinion. Walter, the hero of the opera, with his novel melody that violates the pedantic rules of the master-singers, represents the "music of the future"; Beckmesser represents the malicious and narrow-minded critics, who can see no good in anything that is new in art; and the poet, Hans Sachs, represents enlightened public opinion, always ready to appreciate a genius in advance of his professional colleagues Wagner also burlesques in a very droll manner some of those features of the old-fashioned operatic style, which are now generally admitted to be undramatic and absurd.

Each of Wagner's operas is so novel in subject and musical ideas, that, on hearing one after the other, one might imagine himself transferred to a new world of sounds. But between none of his operas are the differences so great as between "Tristan and Isolde" and "Die Meistersinger," though they were composed in immediate succession, "Tristan" is like a rapturous nocturne in the tropics, "Die Meistersinger" like a festival day in the bracing, cheerful atmosphere of the north. It contains some of the finest choruses ever written—especially in the third act; besides lyric pieces, processions, and even a waltz; and the whole opera gives a most striking and realistic picture of quaint mediæval life in Germany.

It was Wagner's own opinion that "Die Meistersinger," more than any other work of his, would appeal to non-German audiences.

"Die Meistersinger," though it contains so many elements of popularity, is one of Wagner's most mature works. It was composed just after "Tristan," which he himself regarded as the nearest approach to his ideal of the music-drama, and which itself followed "Rheingold" and "Die Walkure," the first two volumes of the Nibelung Tetralogy. The first sketch of the plot of "Die Meistersinger," however, belongs to a much earlier period, having been made even before the composition of "Lohengrin." Immediately after completing the score of "Tannhauser," Wagner visited one of the Bohemian summer resorts, and there, partly urged by friends, who desired him to try his powers in some other than the tragic fields, originated the idea of writing a comic opera, a sequel to "Tannhäuser" (which also deals with a vocal prize contest), just as among the Greeks a satire-play was wont to follow the performance of a tragedy.

"Die Meistersinger" and "Rienzi" are Wagner's only operas that are based on historical instead of mythological subjects.

SCHUMANN ON WAGNER.

Wagner's "Tannhäuser" is at present one of the most popular works in the operatic repertory, not only in Germany, but in this country, and even in Spain and Italy. But when it was first produced it was almost unanimously denounced by the critics, including even so liberal a man as Schumann. In the second volume of Schumann's Letters, issued only a few weeks ago by a Leipzig publisher, occurs the following astounding passage in a letter to Mendelssohn, dated Oct. 23, 1845:

"Wagner has just finished a new opera—no doubt a clever fellow, full of eccentric notions, and bold beyond measure—the aristocracy is still in raptures over him on account of his "Rienzi," but in reality he cannot conceive or write four consecutive bars of good or even correct music. What all these composers lack is the art of writing pure harmonies and four-part choruses.

The music is not a straw better than that of "Rienzi," rather weaker, more artificial! But if I should write this I would be accused of envy, hence I say it only to you, as I am aware that you have known all this a long time."

Three weeks later, however, Schumann again wrote to Mendelssohn: "I must take back much of what I wrote regarding "Tannhauser," after reading the score; on the stage the effect is quite different. I was deeply moved by many parts."

Two months after this (Jan. 7, 1846) he wrote to H. Dorn: "I wish you could see Wagner's 'Tannhäuser.' It contains profound and original ideas, and is a hundred times better than his previous operas, though some of the music is trivial. In a word he may become of great importance to the stage, and so far as I know him, he has the requisite courage. The technical part, the instrumentation, I find excellent, incomparably more masterly than formerly. He has already finished a text, called 'Lohengrin.'"

In another letter to Mendelssohn, Schumann writes: "Wagner surprised us yesterday by showing us his new opera book, 'Lohengrin.' In my case the surprise was double, for I have had in my mind for a year the same subject, or a similar one of the time of the Round Table, and now I shall have to throw it away. Most of those present were exceptionally pleased with the text, especially the painters.

"If the most exquisite orchestral music could be continued without a pause for a series of years, and children were brought up and educated in the room in which it was perpetually resounding, I believe their enjoyment of music, or understanding of it, would be very small."—Ruskin.

A young composer once wrote to Rossini, asking his advice as to the best method of composing an overture. Here is a portion of the answer: "Wait till the evening before the first performance, for nothing excites inspiration like necessity, the presence of a copyist waiting for your work, and the view of a manager in despair tearing out his hair by handfuls. In Italy, in my time, all the managers were bald at thirty.

"I composed the Overture to "Othello" in a small room in the Barbaja Palace where the haldest and most ferocious of managers had shut me up by force, with nothing but a dish of macaroni and the threat that I should not leave the place alive, until I had written the last note. I wrote the Overture to "Gazza Ladra" on the day of the first performance, in an upper loft of the Scala, where I had been confined by the manager under the guard of four scene-shifters, who had orders to throw my text out of the window bit by bit to the copyists who were waiting below to transcribe it. In default of the music I was to be thrown out. For Barbiere I did better. I composed no Overture but tacked on one intended for a very serious work called Elizabetta. The public were delighted. I composed the Overture to Count Ory, while angling, with my feet in the water and in the company of M. Aguado, who was talking Spanish finance all the time. That of "Guillaume Tell" was written under some what similar circumstances," etc. This may be very well for a Rossini, but would be rather a dangerous experiment to recommen das general adaice.

Shakespeare's insight into the function of music ranks him above all other poets. He knows that music "charmeth sleep," "killing care and grief of heart"; it "hath helped madmen to their wits," and "will make wise men mad." "I never heard so musical a discord, such sweet thunder," might be used as a text for a chapter on modern dramatic music.

WHAT IS "TONE-COLOR?"

Professor Helmholtz has proved that, just as white is not a simple color, but a combination of all the hues of the rainbow, so any single tone produced by the voice or a musical instrument is not simple, but contains, besides the fundamenta tone which the ordinary listener alone hears, several "partial" or "overtones," which blend so closely with the fundamental tone that it takes very delicate ear and close at tention to distinguish them.

Were it not for these overtones all instruments would sound alike, and music would lose all its charms of "color."

For the fundamental tones of voices and instruments are identical, and the only thing that enables a musician to tell at a distance whether a given note proceeds from a piano, voice, or violin, is the presence of these overtones, which vary in their number, relative loudness, and pitch, thus giving rise to the differences of quality or timbre in instruments.

TO BE BEAUTIFUL YOU MUST HAVE PEARLY-WHITE TEETH. Adams' Tutti Frutti Chewing Gum beautifies the teeth and preserves them.

How little we think of all that is involved in the beautiful laces which delight our eyes and make light our purses! Sometimes a fine piece of Brussels lace requires the work of seven persons. The thread used is so delicate that it must be spun in damp unhealthy cellars to keep it from separating and becoming unmanageable. This is at a cost of human life! A piece of Valenciennes not two inches wide requires about 300 bobbins, while many patterns need 800.

WHY MOZART WAS POOR.

There was not the famous ingrati tude of people who will not recognize a prophet in his own country; there was not a complicated intrigue of powerful enemies, for he had lots of friends. It was solely his inability to recognize the practical side of life, and to use his friends' advice properly. It is all very fine to say a lofty genius like that thinks only of creating immortal works; what does he know, and how can he be disposed to think of butcher and baker? Charming! But so long as a genius is bound to inhabit a machine whose texture wants daily keeping up by what must be bought from baker and butcher, and so long as interruption of this thoroughly prosaic proceeding has the effect of destroying the very brain which is the seat of the genius, so long will the "lofty purpose" be dragged down, as it were, with heavy, but not-to-be-got-rid-of weights, and there is no choice left but to pay the penalty. In life everything is a bargain. You want to be romantic, to run out in the moonshine, dream of her and sigh to the clouds? Do, by all means. Only next morning you will sneeze, have a headache, and wish the moon and the clouds anywhere. You have had your pleasure—pay for it.—Louis Engel's Reminiscences.

"FIDELIO."

ACT I.—The first scene represents the court-yard of a State prison in Spain. In the lowest part of the dungeon has been lying for two years Florestan, a victim of the hatred of Don Pizarro, governor of the prison, who, after locking up Florestan without just cause, had spread the report that he was dead. But his wife, Leonora, in male attire, and under the name of Fidelio, succeeds in getting admitted to the fortress as assistant of the jailer Rocco. When the curtain rises, Rocco's daughter, Marcellina, is discovered ironing and conversing with Giacelino, another assistant of Rocco, who insists on having her "love, or, at least, marry him," while her affections are bestowed on Fidelio, whom her father also wishes her to marry. Pizarro arrives with his officers and opens his dispatches. Among them he finds one warning him confidentially that the minister has been notified that prisoners are unjustly confined in Pizarro's dungeon, and that he intends to surprise him and investigate matters. Pizarro immediately makes up his mind that Florestan must die, and offers Rocco a large sum to assassinate him. But the jailer cannot overcome his repugnance to such a deed, so Pizarro tells him he will himself stab him, but bids Rocco go and dig the grave. Fidelio reappears on the scene, and begs Rocco to give the prisoners an airing in the yard, to which he consents; but her husband, she finds, is not among them. Pizarro returns in terrible anger at the release of the prisoners, sends them back, and bids Rocco go to his task.

ACT II.—In act second Florestan is seen in his subterranean abode, sitting on a stone and lamenting his fate. Rocco and Leonora appear with tools for digging, and remove a stone and the soil above a cistern. Florestan fails to recognize his wife, who gives him some wine. When Pizarro, at a signal by Rocco, descends and is about to stab the prisoner, Fidelio suddenly draws a pistol and bids him stand back. At this moment a bugle-call is heard outside. The minister has arrived just in time to punish Pizarro, and re-unites Florestan and Leonora.

Handwriting may often be a safe index to character yet as a rule, it cannot hold good. Byron's hand was a school-boy scrawl, Macaulay's an ungraceful sprawl. Keat's was clerky, Scott's utterly disappointing. Emerson wrote in sprawling and illegible characters. Fenimore Cooper and Dickens wrote in a notoriously bad style, while the Ettrick Shepherd's was called "vile." Horace Greeley's was unreadable to all but one compositor who had made it a specialty, and Napoleon's letters to Josephine were mistaken for maps of war operations. On the other hand, Wellington's writing was clear and noble Washington's firm and dignified, Cromwell's bold and steady, Henry VIII's determined, and Franklin's large and bold. Of literary men—that of Gray's was neat and regular, Leigh Hunt's graceful, Moore's easy, Shakespeare's as remarkable as his poetry, Poe's strikingly beautiful, Tennyson's classic, Longfellow's vigorous and poetic looking; Holmes's graceful and quaint, Landor's bold and vigorous, Pitt's writing was flowing, Gladstone's is neat and regular. Lord Palmerston was a model of penmanship, and Chief-Justice Chase was celebrated for the beauty of his writing. Landor, in his "Imaginary Conversations," makes Aspasia say: "Men may be negligent of their hand-writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life; but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly."

One of the features of the fashionable dinners this season is the new dry wine ("Grand Vin Sec") of Louis Roederer. It is also the proper thing to serve it at the swell weddings.

Early in this century, an Edinborough manager, bringing out "King Lear," hit upon a greatly improved device for making "stage-thunder." He laid a "corduroy" road of parallel timbers across the stage ochind the scene, and over these the carpenter was instructed to trundle a wheel-barrow full of nine-pound cannon-balls. The experiment worked with beautiful success, but unfortunately, just as Lear before the scene had worked up to his climax, the carpenter tripped a timber and away went the thunder, following the declivity of the stage towards the front. The scene was powerless to oppose its progress, and quickly went down before the resistless fury of the storm, which next swept on towards the infirm old King, inspiring him with an agility as graceful as it was sudden. Even the dignity of the musicians gave way, and they vaulted with their instruments into the parquet with various degrees of nimbleness, to the accompaniment of crashing glass chimneys and thumping cannon-balls. And in the midst of all this confusion and devastation the author of all the trouble lay prone upon the back of the stage—frightened completely out of the ability to rise.

THE FUTURE OF MUSIC.

"Music has a vast future before it. We are only now beginning to find out some of its uses. With the one exception of its obvious and admitted helpfulness, as an adjunct of religious worship, as a vehicle for and incentive of religious feeling, I had almost said that we had as yet discovered none of its uses.

"Music will some day become a powerful and acknowledged therapeutic, and it is one especially appropriate to this excited age. Half our diseases, some physicians say all our diseases, come from disorder of the nerves. How many ills of the mind precede the ills of the body! Boredom makes more patients than fever. Want of interest and excitement, stagnation of the emotional life, or the fatigue of over-wrought emotion, lies at the root of half the ill-health of our young men and women. Can we doubt the power of music to break up that stagnation? Or, again, can we doubt its power to soothe? To recreate an overstrained emotional life by bending the bow the other way?

"Music is not only a body healer; it is a mind regulator. The great educational function of music remains almost to be discovered. The future mission of music for the million is Discipline of Emotion.

"Music, in short, is bound, when properly used and understood, to train us in the exercise of our emotions, as the gymnasium trains us in the exercise of our limbs. The Greeks understood both these uses; we probably understand neither."—Dr. Hawis.

BECKMESSER'S LUTE.

Many of those who laugh at Beckmesser's unskilled playing of the lute in Wagner's opera, "Die Meistersinger," probably do not know that this instrument stood in relation to the home music of the seventeenth century very much as the piano does to that of the nineteenth.

There were many varieties of lutes, of which the theorbo was the largest. In shape somewhat like a guitar, the lute differed from this instrument in having twenty-four strings, of which ten were never to be stopped, but were always played as open strings, and therefore had to be tuned over each time that a new key was used.

It was this constant necessity of retuning which drove the lute out of use. Mattheson, the contemporary of Handel, wittily estimates that, if a lutist lived up to the age of eighty, he had spent sixty years in tuning his instrument. The lute was sweeter-toned than the guitar, and was equally adapted for accompany song or for purely instrumental passages. Its tone was not unlike that of the zither.

The rise of the more easily tuned guitar, and the perfecting of the various keyed instruments drove the lute into oblivion. Yet it died hard; for we find Bach writing for it, and, even in the time of Mozart, composers for the instrument existed, and the lute still furnished the music of many a German household.

"FIDELIO."

I. ACT.—Don Florestan schmachtet in einem Staatsgefnngniss bei Sevilla, in das ihn Pizarro, der Gouverneur desselben, gewaltthätig und heimlich hat werfen lassen. Seine Gattin, Leonore, hat seine Spur verfolgt, und als sie das Gefängniss als den Ort seines vermuthlgen Aufenthalts entdeckt, sich in Mannskleidern unter den Namen Fidelio als Laufbursche bei dem Kerkermeister desselben, Rocco, vermiethet. Rocco's Tochter, Marcelline, hat eine innige Zuneigung zu Fidelio gefasst, weshalb sie die Werbungen Jaquino's, des Pförtners, abweisst. Doch vergebens hat Fidelio bisher auf Gelegenheit gewartet ihren Mann unter den Gefangenen zu entdecken, da Rocco strengen Befehl hat nur allein die Zellen zu besuchen. Da kommt eines Tages Pizarro und fordert von Rocco er solle Jenen bewussten Gefangenen sofort aus dem Wege schaffen, den er hat entdeckt dass der Minister Revision halten werde weil er gehört hat dass in den Gefängnissen eine Anzahl Nichtverurtheilter schmachte. Da Rocco sich weigert den Mord auszuüben, fordert Pizarro ihm auf nur das Grab vorzubereiten, er wolle den Todesstoss selbst ausführen. Inzwischen hat Rocco die Gefangenen einen Augenblick ins Freie gelassen, doch Fidelio sieht ihren Mann nicht unter ihnen. Sie ahnt dass er der zum Tode verurtheilte sei. Es wird ihr erlaubt mit zu gehen um das Grab vorzubereiten.

II. ACT.—Florestan's Kerker. Rocco und Fidelio erscheinen und graben das Grab. Pizarro kommt und will Florestan todten, als Fidelio dazwischen springt und ihm daran verhindert, indem sie ihm eine Pistole entgegenh lt. Im selben Augenblick hört man eine Trompete, die die Ankunft des Ministers anzeigt. In der letzten Scene muss Leonore vor dem Minister Florestan seine Ketten abnehmen, und Pizarro wird gefangen abgeführt.

At a recent sale of autographs in Berlin, those known to be Richard Wagner's brought the highest prices. His Essay on Meyerbeer—lately found —in which he expresses great admiration for the composer, sold for 640 marks, and one of his own compositions brought 960 marks. Letters to Laube, Meyerheer and others ranged from 70 to 120 marks. A fragment of Wagner's diary, kept while in Paris sold for 115 marks. Two of Chopin's polonaises went for 400 marks.

WAGNER'S "MEISTERSINGER."

Wagner's "Meistersinger" is conspicuous among all his works as being his only comic opera. Satiric opera would, perhaps, be a better term; for it is not comic exactly in the sense in which the operas of Mozart, Rossini and Auber are comic. The humor is essentially German—a combination of playfulness, exuberant animal spirits, practical jokes, satire, burlesque, and withal an under-current of seriousness and even sadness, as is the case with all the best humorous literature.

What makes the satire in the "Meistersinger" the more interesting, is the fact that it has a biographic significance. The opera is, in fact, a musical autobiography—a sketch of Wagner's own life and struggles with his critics and public opinion. Walter, the hero of the opera, with his novel melody that violates the pedantic rules of the master-singers, represents the "music of the future"; Beckmesser represents the malicious and narrow-minded critics, who can see no good in anything that is new in art; and the poet, Hans Sachs, represents enlightened public opinion, always ready to appreciate a genius in advance of his professional colleagues Wagner also burlesques in a very droll manner some of those features of the old-fashioned operatic style, which are now generally admitted to be undramatic and absurd.

Each of Wagner's operas is so novel in subject and musical ideas, that, on hearing one after the other, one might imagine himself transferred to a new world of sounds. But between none of his operas are the differences so great as between "Tristan and Isolde" and "Die Meistersinger,' though they were composed in immediate succession. "Tristan" is like a rapturous nocture in the tropics, "Die Meistersinger" like a festival day in the bracing, cheerful atmosphere of the north. It contains some of the finest choruses ever written—especially in the third act; besides lyric pieces, processions, and even a waltz; and the whole opera gives a most striking and realistic picture of quaint mediæval life in Germany.

It was Wagner's own opinion that "Die Meistersinger," more than any other work of his, would appeal to non-German audiences.

"Die Meistersinger,' though it contains so many elements of popularity, is one of Wagner's most mature works. It was composed just after "Tristan," which he himself regarded as the nearest approach to his ideal of the music-drama, and which itself followed "Rheingold" and "Die Walkure," the first two volumes of the Nibelung Tetrology. The first sketch of the plot of "Die Meistersinger," however, belongs to a much earlier period, having been made even before the composition of "Lohengrin." Immediately after completing the score of "Tannhauser," Wagner visited one of the Bohemian summer resorts, and there, partly urged by friends, who desired him to try his powers in some other than the tragic fields, originated the idea of writing a comic opera, a sequel to "Tannhäuser" (which also deals with a vocal prize contest), just as among the Greeks a satire-play was wont to follow the performance of a tragedy.

"Die Meistersinger" and "Rienzi" are Wagner's only operas that are based on historical instead of mythological subjects.

SCHUMANN ON WAGNER.

Wagner's "Tannhäuser" is at present one of the most popular works in the operatic repertory, not only in Germany, but in this country, and even in Spain and Italy. But when it was first produced it was almost unanimously denounced by the critics, including even so liberal a man as Schumann. In the second volume of Schumann's Letters, issued only a few weeks ago by a Leipsic publisher, occurs the following astounding passage in a letter to Mendelssohn, dated Oct. 22, 1845:

"Wagner has just finished a new opera—no doubt a clever fellow, full of eccentric notions, and bold beyond measure—the aristocracy is still in raptures over him on account of his "Rienzi," but in reality he cannot conceive or write four consecutive bars of good or even correct music. What all these composers lack is the art of writing pure harmonies and four-part choruses.

The music is not a straw better than that of "Rienzi," rather weaker, more artificial! But if I should write this I would be accused of envy, hence I say it only to you, as I am aware that you have known all this a long time."

Three weeks later, however, Schumann again wrote to Mendelssohn: "I must take back much of what I wrote regarding "Tannhäuser," after reading the score; on the stage the effect is quite different. I was deeply moved by many parts."

Two months after this (Jan. 7, 1846) he wrote to H. Dorn: "I wish you could see Wagner's 'Tannhäuser.'" It contains profound and original ideas, and is a hundred times better than his previous operas, though some of the music is trivial. In a word he may become of great importance to the stage, and so far as I know him, he has the requisite courage. The technical part, the instrumentation, I find excellent, incomparably more masterly than formerly. He has already finished a text, called 'Lohengrin.'"

In another letter to Mendelssohn, Schumann writes: "Wagner surprised us yesterday by showing us his new opera book, 'Lohengrin.' In my case the surprise was double, for I have had in my mind for a year the same subject, or a similar one of the time of the Round Table, and now I shall have to throw it away. Most of those present were exceptionally pleased with the text, especially the painters.

"If the most exquisite orchestral music could be continued without a pause for a series of years, and children were brought up and educated in the room in which it was perpetually resounding, I believe their enjoyment of music, or understanding of it, would be very small."—Ruskin.

WHY MOZART WAS POOR.

There was not the famous ingratitude of people who will not recognize a prophet in his own country; there was not a complicated intrigue of powerful enemies, for he had lots of friends. It was solely his inability to recognize the practical side of life, and to use his friends' advice properly. It is all very fine to say a lofty genius like that thinks only of creating immortal works; what does he know, and how can he be disposed to think, of butcher and baker? Charming! But so long as a genius is bound to inhabit a machine whose texture wants daily keeping up by what must be bought from baker and butcher, and so long as interruption of this thoroughly prosaic proceeding has the effect of destroying the very brain which is the seat of the genius, so long will the "lofty purpose" be dragged down, as it were, with heavy, but not to-be-got-rid-of weights, and there is no choice left but to pay the penalty. In life everything is a bargain. You want to be romantic, to run out in the moonshine, dream of her and sigh to the clouds? Do, by all means. Only next morning you will sneeze, have a headache, and wish the moon and the clouds anywhere. You have had your pleasure—pay for it.—Louis Engel's Reminiscences.

PLOT OF "DIE MEISTERSINGER."

ACT I.—Nuremberg, sixteenth century. Choral service in St. Catherine's Church, with orchestral interludes depicting the feelings of Walter, a young knight, towards Eva, the daughter of the goldsmith Pogner—a case of mutual love at first sight. On her way out, with her chaperone Magdalena, Walter accosts her and confesses his love, but hears she is no longer free, as she is to be the bride of the winner at a coming public singing match of the Meistersinger (or Master-singers). Walter resolves to join their guild and become a competitor. So he remains to be examined at their meeting. David, an apprentice, instructs him in regard to the pedantic mysteries and complicated rules for singing adopted by these master-singers. At last they appear in groups. Pogner announces what the prize is to be at the contest, and Walter, at his request, is examined—much to the disgust of the ugly and disagreeable Beckmesser, who proves to be Walter's only rival, all the other masters being married or widowers. Unfortunately, Beckmesser is chosen as critic, to note down on a blackboard, behind a screen, every violation of Walter of the pedantic rules. Before Walter's song is half ended, he rushes out, his blackboard covered with marks. The shoemaker poet, Hans Sachs, speaks in Walter's favor, but is outvoted by the others, and Walter is rejected.

ACT II.—Narrow street. Hans Sachs' house to the left, Pogner's to the right. Apprentices make fun of David, who is in love with Magdalena. Eva hears of Walter's failure, and resolves to elope with him, but the appearance of the watchman compels them to hide. Once more they start, when the sound of a lute is heard. Beckmesser has come to serenade Eva. Just then, Sachs, who wish e to prevent the elopement, moves out his bench, hammers away at a shoe, and sings humorous songs, constantly interrupting the angry Beckmesser's serenade. David comes out and seeing the disguised Magdalena at the window listening to the serenade intended for Eva, becomes jealous, and unmercifully beats Beckmesser. The tumult awakens all the neighbors, who rush into the street and join in the fight, till suddenly the watchman's horn is heard again, and all disperse.

ACT III.—Hans Sachs in his room reading and philosophizing. David comes in, sings a charming song about St. John, and leaves. Walter, who, on account of the frustrated elopement, had spent the night with Sachs, comes down and tells of a wonderful dream he had—the melody of the well-known prize song. Sachs notes it down on paper. They leave; Beckmesser sneaks in and steals the song, thinking it is by the famous Sachs, and hoping to win the prize with it. Eva comes in to have her shoe fitted. Some ends with the famous quintette. Last scene: a meadow with city of Nuremberg in background. Popular festival, singing and dancing. Comic chorus of shoemakers, tailors and bakers. Grand procession of master-singers. Prize contest. Beckmesser sings first, but gets confused and sings amazing nonsense, until his voice is drowned by laughter. Sachs proposes that anyone who can properly sing that song, though not a member of the Trade Union, shall get the prize. All agree; Walter steps forward, sings it, and wins the bride.

893 BROADWAY, 13 EAST 19th STREET. EDWARD A. MORRISON.

One of the features of the fashionable dinners this season is the new dry wine ("Grand Vin Sec") of Louis Roederer. It is also the proper thing to serve it at the swell weddings.

Early in this century, an Edinborough manager, bringing out "King Lear," hit upon a greatly improved device for making "stage-thunder." He laid a "corduroy" road of parallel timbers across the stage behind the scene, and over these the carpenter was instructed to trundle a wheel-barrow full of nine-pound cannon-balls. The experiment worked with beautiful success, but unfortunately, just as Lear before the scene had worked up to his climax, the carpenter tripped a timber and away went the thunder, following the declivity of the stage towards the front. The scene was powerless to oppose its progress, and quickly went down before the resistless fury of the storm, which next swept on towards the infirm old King, inspiring him with an agility as graceful as it was sudden. Even the dignity of the musicians gave way, and they vaulted with their instruments into the parquet with various degrees of nimbleness, to the accompaniment of crashing glass chimneys and thumping cannon-balls. And in the midst of all this confusion and devastation the author of all the trouble lay prone upon the back of the stage—frightened completely out of the ability to rise.

Handwriting may often be a safe index to character yet as a rule, it cannot hold good. Byron's hand was a school-boy scrawl, Macaulay's an ungraceful sprawl. Keat's was clerky, Scott's utterly disappointing. Emerson wrote in sprawling and illegible characters. Fenimore Cooper and Dickens wrote in a notoriously bad style, while the Ettrick Shepherd's was called "vile." Horace Greeley's was unreadable to all but one compositor who had made it a specialty, and Napoleon's letters to Josephine were mistaken for maps of war operations. On the other hand, Wellington's writing was clear and noble Washington's firm and dignified, Cromwell's bold and steady, Henry VIII's determined, and Franklin's large and bold. Of literary men—that of Gray's was neat and regular, Leigh Hunt's graceful, Moore's easy, Shakespeare's as remarkable as his poetry, Poe's strikingly beautiful, Tennyson's classic, Longfellow's vigorous and poetic looking; Holmes's graceful and quaint, Landor's bold and vigorous, Pitt's writing was flowing, Gladstone's is neat and regular. Lord Palmerston was a model of penmanship, and Chief-Justice Chase was celebrated for the beauty of his writing. Landor, in his "Imaginary Conversations," makes Aspasia say: "Men may be negligent of their hand-writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life; but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly."

THE FUTURE OF MUSIC.

"Music has a vast future before it. We are only now beginning to find out some of its uses. With the one exception of its obvious and admitted helpfulness, as an adjunct of religious worship, as a vehicle for and incentive of religious feeling, I had almost said that we had as yet discovered none of its uses.

"Music will some day become a powerful and acknowledged therapeutic, and it is one especially appropriate to this excited age. Half our diseases, some physicians say all our diseases, come from disorder of the nerves. How many ills of the mind precede the ills of the body! Boredom makes more patients than fever. Want of interest and excitement, stagnation of the emotional life, or the fatigue of over-wrought emotion, lies at the root of half the ill-health of our young men and women. Can we doubt the power of music to break up that stagnation? Or, again, can we doubt its power to soothe? To recreate an overstrained emotional life by bending the bow the other way?

"Music is not only a body healer; it is a mind regulator. The great educational function of music remains almost to be discovered. The future mission of music for the million is Discipline of Emotion.

"Music, in short, is bound, when properly used and understood, to train us in the exercise of our emotions, as the gymnasium trains us in the exercise of our limbs. The Greeks understood both these uses; we probably understand neither."—Dr. Haweis.

BECKMESSER'S LUTE.

Many of those who laugh at Beckmesser's unskilled playing of the lute in Wagner's opera, "Die Meistersinger," probably do not know that this instrument stood in relation to the home music of the seventeenth century very much as the piano does to that of the nineteenth.

There were many varieties of lutes, of which the theorbo was the largest. In shape somewhat like a guitar; the lute differed from this instrument in having twenty-four strings, of which ten were never to be stopped, but were always played as open strings, and therefore had to be tuned over each time that a new key was used.

It was this constant necessity of retuning which drove the lute out of use. Mattheson, the contemporary of Handel, wittily estimates that, if a lutist lived up to the age of eighty, he had spent sixty years in tuning his instrument. The lute was sweeter-toned than the guitar, and was equally adapted for accompany song or for purely instrumental passages. Its tone was not unlike that of the zither.

The rise of the more easily tuned guitar, and the perfecting of the various keyed instruments drove the lute into oblivion. Yet it died hard; for we find Bach writing for it, and, even in the time of Mozart, composers for the instrument existed, and the lute still furnished the music of many a German household.

"DIE MEISTERSINGER."

I. ACT.—Nürenberg im XVI. Jahrhundert. Choral-gesang in der Kirche. Der Ritter, Walter von Stolzing, verliebt sich in Eva, Tochter des Goldschmied's Pogner. Er bekennt ihr seine Liebe während sie mit ihre Amme Magdalene, die Kirche verlassen will, hört aber dass sie nicht mehr ganz frei ist, denn ihr Vater hat ihre Hand demjenigen Meistersänger versprochen, der bei einem kommenden Wettgesang den Preis gewinnen wird. Walter entschliesst sich auch Meistersinger zu werden, und um den Preis zu werben. Er erwartet die Zusammenkunft der Meister, um seine Probe zu bestehen. Inzwischen weilt ihn Lehrjunge David in die complicirten Regeln des Gesanges ein. Die Meister erscheinen, Pogner kündigt an worin der Preis besteht, und Walter wird zum Examen zugelassen. Ungluckicherweise wird der hässliche und neidische Beckmesser, der auch um den Preis singen will, als "Merker" gewählt, und zeichnet nun hinter seinem Vorhang, alle die "Fehler" in Walter's Gesang gerauscht voll auf ein schwarzes Brett. Als es voll ist, stürzt er hervor, und die Meister erklären dass Walter nicht aufgenommen werden könne, obwohl der Dichter und Schuster Hans Sachs ihn zu vertheidigen sucht.

II. ACT.—Enge Strasse. Hans Sachsen's Haus zur linken, Pogner's zur rechten Seite. Lehrjungen machen sich über David lustig, der in Magdalene verliebt ist. Eva hört von Sachs dass Walter Flasco gemacht hat, und entschliesst sich nun mit ihm zu entfliehen; doch der Nachtwächter mit seinem Horn erscheint, und verhindert das Vorhaben. Ein zweiter Versuch wird verhindert durch das Erscheinen Beckmessers, der mit seiner Laute Eva ein Ständchen bringen will. Zur selben Zeit bringt Sachs seine Schusterbank heraus und singt humoristische Lieder, zum grossen Aergernisse Beckmesser's. David erscheint, und sieht Magdalene am Fenster als Eva verkleidet, und der Serenade lauschend. Eifersüchtig greift er Beckmesser an. Grosser Tumult; die Nachbarn eilen herbei, und eine bunte Progetei folgt, bis den Nachtwächter's Horn alle zerstreut. Der Nachtwächter schreitet furchtsam über die Bühne.

III. ACT.—Hans Sachs philosophirt. David erscheint und bittet um Verzeihung für den Tumult. Dann kommt Walter, den Sachs nach der misglückten Einführung in sein Haus genommen hatte. Er ermahnt seinen Traum—die Melodie des Preisliedes—und Sachs schreibt sie auf. Beckmesser schleicht herbei, stiehlt das Lied und steckt es in sich, da er glaubt es sei ein neues Lied von Sachs, mit dem er den Preis gewinnen kann. Eva kommt um ihre Sachen zusprobieren. Grosses Quintet Scenenwechsel. Wiese vor Nürenberg. Volksfest. Komische Chore der Schuster, Schneider und Bäcker. Zog der Meistersinger. Beckmesser besteigt das Podium, und versucht das gestohlene Lied zu singen, verstummt es aber entsetzlich und wird ausgelacht. Nun singt es Walter correct, und wird darauf als Meistersinger ernannt, und gewinnt Eva's Hand.

At a recent sale of autographs in Berlin, those known to be Richard Wagner's brought the highest prices. His Essay on Meyerbeer—lately found—in which he expresses great admiration for the composer, sold for 640 marks, and one of his own compositions brought 960 marks. Letters to Laube, Meyerbeer and others ranged from 70 to 120 marks. A fragment of Wagner's diary, kept while in Paris, sold for 115 marks. Two of Chopin's polonaises went for 400 marks.

To Messrs. STEINWAY & SONS,
New York:

DEAR SONS: Allow me to express to you the great satisfaction and pleasure that I have experienced from the use of your famous Pianos, which you have placed at my disposal during the Concert tour now in course of progress in the United States.

During my artistic career in the art centres of the world, I have used the pianos of nearly all celebrated manufacturers, but none of them can be compared to yours—none possess to such a marvelous degree that sympathetic, poetic and singing tone quality which distinguishes the Steinway as peerless among them all. Before returning to Europe, I shall select and purchase one of your Grand pianos for Craigynos Castle, my residence in South Wales.

Respectfully yours, ADELINA PATTI.

The "Bijou" Grandcolly five feet in length) is the latest addition to the styles of Pianos manufactured by the well-known house of Steinway & Co.

This is certainly the smallest Grand Piano ever made, and creates a genuine furore among musicians on account of its immense power of tone and the really sweet quality it possesses. It will not fail to meet with large sales.

The fashionable prejudice of paying for a first-class piano double its intrinsic value has been destroyed by the Hardman Pianos, which are faultless, and can be bought at a reasonable and modest price. The new Upright Pianos by the Mason & Hamlin Co. are exciting much interest in musical circles. A new method of stringing gives them tones of extraordinary brightness and purity, with remarkable durability, fitting them for use in most trying situations and climates. They do not fall from the pitch or require tuning one-quarter as much as pianos on the old system. An improvement on the well known French Repeating Action gives them capacity for rapid repetition of tones equal or superior to that of the best grand pianos. In excellence of material and elegance of workmanship, they are unsurpassed by any pianos made. Specimens may be seen at the warerooms of the Company, 46 East 14th St., Union Square. The same Company now manufactures more than one hundred styles of Organs, which are of such established excellence as to require no further commendation.

ANTON RUBINSTEIN.

NEW YORK, May 24, 1873.

Messrs. STEINWAY & SONS:

GENTLEMEN: On the eve of returning to Europe, I deem it my pleasant duty to express to you my thanks for the many marks of the kindness and courtesy you have shown me during my stay in the United States; but also, and above all, for your unrivaled Piano Fortes, which once more have done full justice to their world-wide reputation, both for easy touch and capacity of enduring the severest trials. For during all my long and difficult journeys all over America, in a very inclement season, I used and have been enabled to use your Pianos exclusively in my two hundred and fifteen concerts, and also in private, with the most eminent satisfaction and effect. Yours, very truly,

ANTON RUBINSTEIN.

Messrs. STEINWAY & SONS:

GENTS: The magnificent Steinway Grand Piano now stands in my music room, and presents a harmonic totality of admirable qualities, a detailed enumeration of which is the more superfluous, as this instrument fully justifies the world-wide reputation that for years you have everywhere enjoyed.

After so much well deserved praise, permit me to also add my homage, and the expression of my undisguised admiration, with which I remain,

Very sincerely yours,

FRANZ LISZT.

AND OTHER WORKS.

To prevent misapprehension as to the character of the proposed performances in respect of operas and their interpreters, a few remarks may not be superfluous. As will be noted, after reference to the repertoire printed above, the list of works chosen for interpretation has been prepared in as catholic a spirit as can be wished. It embraces not merely the masterpieces of the French and Italian school, as adhered to exclusively by the managers of Italian Opera in general, nor only the great achievements of the German composers, but such representative productions of all schools as have withstood the severest contemporary criticism, and, at the same time, hold their place in public favor. In Meyerbeer's grand operas, the admirer of German music, as popularly understood, cannot but recognize the brilliancy and consummate dramatic skill of the composer; and in the early productions of Wagner, as "Rienzi," "Flying Dutchman," "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin," the direct influence of the Italian school will be cheerfully admitted and enjoyed by the lover of tune, pure and simple. In the "Walkure," one of his latest masterpieces—which has achieved triumph in all the principal foreign Opera Houses—his ideal that opera should develop into the musical drama, is carried to its highest perfection. The production of this work during the coming season will be welcomed by all lovers of music. The artists who will appear in it are Mme. Materna, the first Walkure at Bayreuth, Herr Anton Schott, and Mme. Kraus, who have won laurels in the respective parts of Siegmund and Sieglinde, in Italy as well as Germany. The armor and costumes in this opera are being specially prepared in Berlin, and will be an exact counterpart of those used at the Bayreuth Festival.

Comparative novelties, to an American public, are Wagner's "Tannhäuser," "La Juive," of Halevy, "Masaniello," "Merry Wives of Windsor," "La Dame Blanche," "Hans Heiling," etc. —all of them works which are constantly demanded and performed at European Opera Houses.

So much misunderstanding and so much misrepresentation exists on the subject of opera in German, that it cannot be made too clear to the American reader that the scheme of the Metropolitan Opera House embraces the production of works that lay claim to no other nationality than the universal nationality of art. As much may be said of the performers engaged for the approaching season. Almost all are of cosmopolitan celebrity, the leading performers having been heard in London as well as in Berlin, Vienna, Paris, and the principal cities of Italy, with phenomenal success.

LOHENGRIN.

ADVENTURES OF AN OPERA ONCE ABUSED, NOW ADMIRED—SOME FUNNY CRITICISMS—"DIE WALKURE."

There is nothing in the annals of music of greater interest than the history of "Lohengrin," because its fate is typical of that of most immortal works, which are at first ignored, then misunderstood and ridiculed, and finally accepted as classical masterpieces.

A glance at the statistics of German Opera Houses shows that everywhere "Lohengrin" is more frequently performed than any other opera of the present or past. And even in other countries, where it is generally performed in a mutilated and imperfect form, it has won a popularity hardly second to that of any other work. The story of "Lohengrin" is so ingenious and pathetic, the score so full of melody, the instrumental coloring so brilliant and varied, the harmonies so original and stirring, that no one who knows the alphabet of music can fail to be stirred by this masterwork. But, strange to relate, thirty years ago this opera had to be almost forced on the world by a few eminent musicians, who first realized the originality and power of Wagner's genius.

"Lohengrin" was written in 1847, but Wagner was unable to get it accepted for performance until 1850, although he was already well known as the composer of "Rienzi," "Flying Dutchman," and "Tannhäuser." At last he received word that his friend Liszt was preparing it for performance, and on Aug. 28, 1850, "Lohengrin" was for the first time given under the direction of Liszt, who at the same time wrote an essay, in which he pointed out the beauties and the epoch-making importance of this opera. Nevertheless, Germany was slow in listening to his advice. Three years elapsed, before another city, Wiesbaden, followed the example of Weimar. Leipzig and Frankfort followed in 1854, while Munich and Vienna, which are now the headquarters of Wagnerism, waited till 1858, and Berlin even a year longer! That is, Berlin waited almost ten years before accepting this opera, which now fills the coffers of the Royal Opera more than any other stage work. But the very same manager repeated this manœuvre twenty years later with the Nibelung Trilogy, which he did not accept for Berlin until last year—seven years after the Bayreuth festival, and after cities of the second and even the third rank had shown that the Trilogy invariably proved an artistic and pecuniary success! Some people are born fools and never learn by experience.

And what did the critics at first say concerning "Lohengrin," which every one now admits is full of melody and charm? Here are a few of the criticisms from leading newspapers in various cities: "Entirely devoid of melody." "Formlessness reduced to a system." "An abyss of ennui." "Garrulous triviality assuming immense cable dimensions." "Nine-tenths of the score consist of miserable, utterly inane phrases." "The whole instrumentation breathes an impure atmosphere." "An insult to the very essence of music."

This list, which might be indefinitely extended, has its instructive as well as its comic side. Although nobody dares to speak disparagingly of "Lohengrin" at this date, many still take pleasure in sneering at Wagner's later and more mature works. Yet not only Wagner himself but Liszt, Bulow, Tausig, and all those who have most carefully studied Wagner's later works, and heard them at Bayreuth, consider them grander and more beautiful than his early operas. Is their opinion of no account, because it is "expert testimony?" Should a man who has the genius to write a "Lohengrin" not be believed when he claims that "Tristan" or "Die Walkure" is a greater work still? Some may be unable to fully appreciate them at a first hearing; but the same was true of those who first heard "Lohengrin" thirty years ago. No opera are so well worth hearing a dozen or a score of times as Wagner's; and no one can, after repeated hearing, fail to appreciate them, if he bears in mind that the action is of equal importance with the music, and also in the orchestra. "Die Walkure" will be produced at the Metropolitan Opera House this season with Frau Materna, the original Brunnhilde of the Bayreuth festival; and on the reception accorded this work will depend the judgment whether Americans are as cosmopolitan and intelligent in music as in other things.

THE STORY OF LOHENGRIN.

I. The best short sketch of the plot of "Lohengrin" in existence may be found in Dr. Hueffer's short biography of Wagner, (in the Great Musician's series) pp. 26-34. Here the bare outlines only can be indicated. The opening scene reveals a meadow near Antwerp, on which King Henry has assembled the nobles of Brabant. Count Telramund, whose offer of marriage had been refused by Elsa, Princess of Brabant, seeks to avenge himself by accusing her of having murdered her younger brother, in order that she might share the rule of the country with a secret lover. Elsa appears before the King, declares her innocence, and tells of a vision in which a knight appeared to her, promising to be her champion. The Herald's first recall for her knight remains unanswered, but after the second a knight appears on a boat drawn by a swan. After making Elsa promise never to ask who he is or whence he came, he vanquishes Telramund, but generously spares his life.

II. The opening of the second act is conceived in Wagner's latest style, and is highly dramatic and effective if interpreted by a vocalist-actress like Brandt or Materna. Telramund and his wife Ortrud are out in the dark, before the palace, from which issue the joyous strains of wedding music. The two plot revenge, and Ortrud, who is a witch, knows that if she can sow suspicion in Elsa's breast and induce her to ask Lohengrin the forbidden question, he will have to leave her. So when Elsa, following the bridal procession, is about to enter the church, she takes her aside, and hints that Lohengrin is a sorcerer. Subsequently Telramund interrupts the bridal pair and accuses Lohengrin of witchcraft, but is obliged to yield to the popular indignation, and the bridal procession moves on.

III. The scene at the opening of Act III, represents the bridal chamber. The first insinuations of Ortrud leave Elsa no peace, and, notwithstanding her husband's warning, she yields to her anxious curiosity and asks the fatal question about his name and home. Hardly has she uttered these words, when Telramund rushes in to assassinate Lohengrin, who, however, passes his own sword through his enemy. The scene changes to the same meadow seen in Act I. The body of Telramund is brought before the King and Lohengrin announces, in a thrilling narrative, which is one of Wagner's master-passages, that he is obliged to depart, and that he is one of the knights of the holy Grail whose mission is to assist innocent mortals in distress, but who can only do so on condition of concealing their origin. The swan now arrives to take him away, when Ortrud advances and announces that the swan is no one else than Elsa's brother, converted by Ortrud's magic arts into a swan. Lohengrin's prayer changes him back to human form, and a dove having taken its place, the knight departs.

MOZART'S "DON JUAN."

In 1786, a few months after the successful performance of his "Figaro" in Vienna, Mozart was invited to Prague to witness the immense enthusiasm it had aroused in Prague. As he wrote in one of his letters: "The one subject of conversation here is—'Figaro'; nothing is played, sung or whistled but—'Figaro'; nobody goes to any opera but—'Figaro'; everlastingly 'Figaro.'" Under these circumstances he readily agreed to Bondini's demand that he should write a new opera, specially for Prague, for which he was to receive 100 ducats.

This opera, for which Da Ponte wrote the libretto, was "Don Juan." "On the evening before the representation," says Herr Pohl, "the overture was still wanting, and he worked at it far into the night, while his wife kept him supplied with punch and told him fairy stories to keep him awake. Sleep, however, overcame him, and he was obliged to rest for a few hours, but at seven in the morning the copyist received the score, and it was played at eight in the evening." The first performance took place Oct. 2d, 1787.

Dr. Gehring observes that Goethe was not at fault when he observed that Mozart would have been the man to compose his "Faust." "Don Giovanni" is the expression of a universal genius, which could reproduce in music every emotion of the human heart—great and small—with equal truth to nature. And Dr. Hanslick, the famous Viennese critic, after admitting that there is much in Mozart that has become antiquated, claims "Don Juan" as a distinct exception, which after a life time of critical duty "has preserved its original power over me and fills me at every performance with fresh delight and admiration."

One of the most noteworthy things in "Don Juan" is the fact that the most original and fascinating music in it occurs in the scene where the ghost appears to Don Juan. The supernatural always seems to have inspired composers to their best efforts, and it is surprising how many of the best operas are based on such subjects.

"Don Juan" represents the culminating point of Italian opera, and also the point where it meets German opera. For Mozart was quite as much Italian as he was German; and if on the one hand he owed much of his success to the study of Italian vocal models, the Italian composers, Rossini and others, on the other hand, learned much from Mozart regarding the use of the orchestra.

RICHARD WAGNER.

Two Letters from Richard Wagner.

During the Grand Operatic Festival at Bayreuth in 1875, a number of new Grand pianos of the most celebrated European as well as of several American makers had been placed at Mr. Richard Wagner's disposal; among them a new Centennial Concert Grand piano made by "Steinway & Sons" of New York, which from its wonderful power, beauty and sympathetic quality far outvalued all rival instruments and which Mr. Richard Wagner at once chose for his own private use.

In the beginning of 1876, Mr. Wagner was requested by Mr. Theo. Steinway to send this piano to the Steinway Central European depot, for one of our receive the latest invention, the "Tone Pulsator," patented July, 1878. On sending the Grand, Mr Wagner written as follows:

Bayreuth, March 11th, 1879.

My dear Mr. Steinway,

I miss my Steinway Grand as one misses a beloved wife; it is wanting constantly, wanting every where. I no longer indulge in music since that Grand is gone, and trust its absence will not be too long protracted. Very truly yours,

RICHARD WAGNER."

The following letter was written to Mr. Theodore Steinway by the great master shortly after the return of the Steinway Grand (now containing the Tone Pulsator) to his home:

Bayreuth, April 11th, 1879.

My dear Mr. Steinway,

Really, you ought personally to have witnessed the gratification which I experienced upon receiving back your magnificent Grand piano; you certainly would not have asked me to add another word.

I do indeed deem it humiliating for so many other branches of art, that this art of building piano-fortes should have so greatly outstripped the admirable principles of construction of seeking to Painting, Sculpture, Architecture, Literature, and, not to mention, also Music, which—since I have to appreciation of same,—could compare with the mastery of perfection reached in piano-forte building.

From your communications, however, I readily perceive with what enthusiastic love you seek to attain the incorporation of the most "spiritualic" tone in the piano which the notation shall only serve as the exponent of actual musical sound. Our great (Tone-Master), when writing the general recitation for the piano-forte, seem to have had a presentiment of the blest Grand piano, as now attained by yourselves. A Beethoven Sonata, a Bach Chromatic Fantasie will only be appreciated when rendered upon one of your piano-fortes.

Although I do not possess the slightest dexterity in piano-forte playing, I delight in being able to do justice to your assumption of my labors and cultivated sense of tone. For Sounds of such Beauty as those coming from my Steinway Grand, flatter and coax the most agreeable Tone pictures from my bar more melodic tones.

In a word, "I find your Grand piano of wondrous beauty. It is a solid work of Art." And with a thousand thanks for this new attention, I delight in being able to call myself Your friend,

RICHARD WAGNER."

ROSSINI'S ONLY GRAND OPERA.

Opinions are divided as to whether the "Barber of Seville" or "William Tell" is to be accepted as Rossini's best opera. But these works are so different in character that no comparison is possible. The "Barber" is doubtless the best comic opera ever written by an Italian, brimful of tunes and based on a clever libretto; but "William Tell" is a much grander and more ambitious work; and although the form of serious spectacular opera was not so congenial to Rossini as that of opera bouffe, "William Tell" yet contains his best inspirations.

It is now the fashion to speak contemptuously of Rossini's operas; but, although most of his earlier works have properly been removed from the repertory because there were in them too many concessions to a taste for florid song which we have outgrown, his two masterworks will long remain to prove that Rossini had real genius and that, had he continued to write for the stage after giving "Tell" to the world, he might have attained as high a place in the list of composers as Mozart. But it is a most curious fact that after the production of this opera in 1829, Rossini lived 38 years without writing anything more than his "Stabat Mater." He had a comfortable income, all the fame that a mortal can desire, and he himself confessed to Hiller that "when a man has composed thirty-seven operas he begins to feel a little tired."

Rossini was a great admirer of Mozart, whose influence is apparent in his best scores. Rossini was, as one of his biographers remarks, the first Italian composer who accompanied recitativo with the full band, assigned leading parts to bass singers, made of each dramatic scene one continuous piece of music, and brought to perfection those highly varied, amply developed concerted finales, which form so striking a feature in modern Italian opera.

An amusing anecdote is told, which shows that Rossini's innovations were received in the same spirit at that time as Wagner's have been in our own. "Semiramide," which to our modern taste seems as gentle and innocent as a lamb, was commenced by Rossini with a duet for drums. An old fogy, thinking that this was too frivolous a thing to be permitted in a serious work, went about with the proclaimed intention of killing the reckless innovator. But Rossini invited him to his house, explained to him that in a military opera drums were not perhaps out of place, and finally succeeded in appeasing his wrath.

At the Grand Opera in Paris "William Tell" was sung for the seven hundredth time on Oct. 11, 1884.

FRAULEIN BELY.

Fräulein Hermine Bely is by birth a Hungarian. She is therefore musically well born, for Hungary has contributed many names that have made luminous the pages of musical history. She begun her career in the Royal Hungarian National Theatre at Buda-Pesth. Her schooling had been admirable, and she had already begun a successful career in her native country, though young and inexperienced comparatively when she fell under the notice of the director of the Stadt Theater in Hamburg, and was engaged by him as "erste Coloratur-sangerin" for that establishment. The beauty of her stage presence, no less than the flexibility of her voice, soon won for her a warm spot in the hearts of the Hamburgians, and many expressions of regret followed her across the ocean on the part of newspaper writers and opera lovers.

Last summer Fräulein Bely sang an engagement of three months' duration in Berlin, appearing in such roles as Gilda, Martha, Dinorah, Rosina and Lucia. She was greeted with expressions of undisguised admiration and wonder by the critics of the German capital "R. E." in one of his feuilletons wrote:

"Hermine Bely, through the power of her imagination governs the moods of her soul as easily as the Hungarian poet (Petöfi.) If she showed herself full of merriment and roguishness in the glaiseome scenes of Rossini's opera, her senses as Lucia were drenched with suffering and woe, and she gave the daughter of Scotland a most touching impersonation. Of all the Lucias whom I have seen, Hermine Bely approaches nearest to the diva Adelina Patti. The tones may have come fuller and with greater brilliancy from the mouth of Etelka Gerster before her visit to America. Frau Schröder-Hanfstaengl may decorate the great aria with more copious adornments, nevertheless the youthful singer surpasses both her famous sisters in the harmonious coöperation of three factors—the delicate sensibility of her tones, the admirable and consistent embodiment of the character, (the product of a vivid and intelligent conception), and the loveliness of her presence. Fräulein Bely's voice is not very powerful; if it were to pour along like a mighty flood it would not be adapted to embellished singing. It is fluent, mobile and full of modulatory capacity. Her high soprano reminds one of the tender, light blue of a spring sky. And the voice has been equably and nobly schooled, is free of all slack, and sounds sweet and persuasive in every register.

"Fräulein Bely sang the insanity aria in a masterly manner. These sweet tones gradually swelling and then dying away like a spirit's breath, were permeated with the sadness of insanity; these pearly coloraturi reflected a ray of the dying flash of humor, the pleasures of maidenly coquetry colored the runs which were executed with marvellous flexibility, and the strong cries with which she challenged the echo were sentient with the longing for lost happiness. An aspiration of tragic poetry breathed through the aria, and the deception that it was really one distraught who played with her woe in tones was not disturbed for a moment. This is a great advantage. Patti excepted, I know only this singer who did not get out of character in the insanity aria."

Another writer discussing Fräulein Bely's Rosina, says:

"Fräulein Bely is a specialist. Her forte is embellished song, and in this specialty she knows how to excel. Having a voice that is vibrant and fluent if not powerful, and, as appears from all that she does, trained in an excellent school, she is destined to win success in the operas of the old Italian type, and in comic opera. Her Rosina of yesterday was in all respects pleasing. Personality, song and action formed an attractive whole, and in the interpolated Russian song, 'The Nightingale,' by Alieneff (D minor), with variations, Fräulein Bely developed a charming technique. Particularly noticeable was the endurance of her trill on the A of the twice-marked octave."

The New York Trio-Club announces two soirees and one matinee, to be given at the Metropolitan Opera House Concert Hall, during the season of 1884-85. The New York Trio Club consists of the following artists: Mr. Bern. Boekelman, Pianist; Mr. Bielsh. Richter, Violinist; Mr. Adolf Hartdegen, Violoncellist. Vocal Soloists will be engaged to relieve the instrumental works. The Soirées will take place —the first, on Tuesday, December 16, 1884, Anniversary day of Beethoven's birthday, when the programme will consist entirely of works of that illustrious composer. Succeeding soirées will follow. The Popular Matinee will be announced after the first evening. Subscription Price for both Soirees and Matinee, $3.00. Single Tickets for one evening, $1.50, and for Matinee, $1.00. Subscription list at Schuberth & Co., Brentano, Fond, Martens Bros.

ANNETTE ESSIPOFF.

NEW YORK, May 16th, 1877.

Messrs. STEINWAY & SONS,

NEW YORK:

GENTLEMEN: Intending to sail for Europe next Wednesday, permit me to tender you my sincerest thanks for the many courtesies extended to me during my concert tour throughout the United States and Canada for the past six months.

I also take this opportunity to express to you the great pleasure and gratification I have enjoyed from the use—both in public and in private—of your really matchless pianos, with which I am more in love than ever.

Component parts of tone are clearly and distinctly perceptible to sensitive and cultivated ears, and I frequently detect luscious mixture in what is designated as a sympathetic tone in the pianos of other makers.

The wonderful beauty and sympathetic tone quality of the Steinway piano, so delightful and so as to say, satiating to the sense of hearing, arises from the perfect purity of its component parts, hence its richness, its gem like sparkle and brilliancy, which, together with the greatest possible volume, depth, sonority and unequalled singing and carrying quality to a distance, rejoice—to my taste—the Steinway tone the very essence of poetry.

The action is perfection itself, responding with equal promptitude to the most delicate or powerful touch, and under the severest trials the wonderful repetition, delicacy and power remains unchanged, positive the boundless resources of the Steinway appear to be fully unlocked, according to the inspiration of the artist.

No other piano or American pianos known to me possess such extraordinary durability under the severest usage, nor combine all excellences to such a high degree as yours, and in them I have found my ideal instrument.

I cannot conclude without referring to your tone-sustaining pedal, a highly valuable addition, greatly extending the capacity of the Piano for the production of those charming effects, which it has afforded me great pleasure to introduce in various compositions—both classical and modern.

Wishing you every possible success.

I remain, most sincerely yours,

ANNETTE ESSIPOFF.

AN ITALIAN PROFESSOR ON WAGNER.

Even Italy, the home of lyric song, is becoming gradually imbued with the Wagnerian spirit. When Neumann, with his Nibelung company (including Mme. Krauss), invaded Italy, a year ago, he was everywhere received with favor, and, in some places, with enthusiasm; and the three leading Italian composers of the day—Verdi, Boito and Sgambati—unmistakably show the influence of the modern German school. The famous Roman professor, Pietro Blaserna, thus sums up his views on Wagner in his work on "The Theory of Sound in Relation to Music":

"It must be admitted that while Italian music has undergone in this century a sensible decline, in Germany it has remained elevated. The study of harmony and grand orchestral movements and deep dramatic feeling and expression, notwithstanding some too realistic exaggerations and some trivialities, have been brought to a high degree of perfection by the intellectual influence of Richard Wagner. We owe it to him, that for libretti—almost always insipid, and which served as bare excuses for the musical part of the work—has been substituted a more masculine and independent form of poetry. The closer union of poetry and music, in which both arts advance with regular step without one being smothered by the other, constitutes, perhaps, the most salient and most beautiful character of his music, which is almost always lofty, most rich, and which transports us to an ideal sphere.

"I say this in spite of all the clamor which has been raised on both sides of the Alps against the "music of the future. It is reproached with being too studied and too refined, and with leaning not toward feeling, but calculation and combination.

"But we need only listen to it with attention and without prejudice to be convinced of the greatness and number of the beauties which it contains. The prelude to 'Lohengrin,' 'Tannhäuser,' and other things, prove the contrary. This music has had the great and sad privilege of exciting, almost incredibly, passions in its favor and against it; but when these passions have grown calm, I believe that it will be impossible to deny to it the character of a great musical poem whose limits will extend far beyond the national circle for which it was written."

MARIANNE BRANDT.

Less than any other member of the company of artists engaged for the metropolitan season, with the single exception of Mme. Materna does Fräulein Marianne Brandt, need an introduction. For fifteen years she has been among the foremost artists who have brought credit to the operatic stage of Germany. In Berlin and at Bayreuth her name is written high up in the list of Germany's greatest singers. At Bayreuth Brandt and Materna have alternated in the great rôles of Wagner, and the ranks of the Wagnerites are split in their attempts to determine which of the two shall be ranked as the first representative of Wagner's female rôles. Fräulein Brandt had scarcely begun her career in 1868 when she was engaged at the royal opera at Berlin, and, though she has sung many star engagements throughout Europe since, no manager has succeeded in disengaging her from the first stage of North Germany.

Fräulein Brandt was born September 12, 1842, in Vienna, where she received her musical and stage training at the conservatory—1862–1864. She had purposed becoming a teacher of singing, but an accident placed her on the operatic stage. This was in 1867 at Olmütz. She sang during that year at Olmütz, Klagenfurt, and Graz, and in April, 1868, was triumphantly carried off by the Berlin Intendant, who has renewed her engagement before it has expired ever since.

Fräulein Brandt's repertory is almost co-extensive with the list of German and Italian dramatic operas. Her voice is a contralto of such extraordinary compass that, like Materna's, it adapts itself with equal effectiveness to contralto and mezzo-soprano parts. Her triumphs in Gluck's "Armide," Weber's "Euryanthe," Spontini's "La Vestale," Meyerbeer's "Le Prophete," in which she sings contralto rôles, are no greater than those which latterly she has won in "Don Giovanni" (Elwira), "Fidelio," "La Juive," "Les Huguenots" (Valentine), and "Die Walkure."

Articles Lost and Found—Any one finding lost articles in the auditorium will oblige the management by leaving same at the Treasurer's office in the main lobby, and all articles found, after the audience disperses, should be inquired for there.

TO THE PUBLIC.

The interior of the establishment has been entirely repainted and decorated in every department upon the most approved plans of the present day. As now opened to the public it presents to the eye such a scene of beauty, taste and brilliancy in its construction and embellishments that it may fairly challenge comparison with any of the first-class places of amusement in the metropolis. The most extensive and various additions and improvements that experience could suggest for the comfort and convenience of the audience have been originally effected. Exact attention is called to arrangement and decorations of the floor and to the changes made in the relative positions of the stage and proscenium boxes by which the comfort of the box holders is insured and the general effect greatly improved. Perfect ventilation has been secured by all of the most recent inventions that science could devise. During the winter season the entire building will be heated by one of the most improved steam boiler apparatus and hot water pipes, thus rendering it at all times, as regards ventilation and temperature, one of the most agreeable and comfortable establishments in the city.

The improvements behind the scenes have been in every way commensurate with those in front of the curtain, and in fact the whole theatre has been entirely renovated and improved at a vast expense in hopes of rendering it worthy of the patronage and support of the people of New York and vicinity. Mr. Harrigan having secured a long lease of the building, faithfully pledges himself that it shall be conducted as a first-class place of amusement in the most respectable and liberal manner, both before and behind the curtain, and he will present attractions in every way worthy an intelligent and refined community, and by liberally catering for the patrons of amusement hopes to obtain a merited and positive success. In presenting "OLD LAVENDER," as the opening attraction, Mr. Harrigan offers to his patrons a very strong dramatic picture of certain phases of city life replete with local views of New York. This play was first produced some years ago as a one act farce. It has been entirely rewritten and remodelled by Mr. Harrigan, and, as now produced, augmented by six new and taking songs in Mr. Dave Braham's happiest vein, supported by all of the old Theatre Comique company and a number of carefully selected additions, we trust it will meet the approbation of the audience.

BALTSON.—To me the Weber Piano contains everything that can be wished for in an instrument.

NEAL the Florist, has always on hand the choicest variety of roses and all cut flowers at very reasonable prices.

AFTER the play drop into Joe Coburn's White House, corner Broadway and Thirty-ninth street. Choice wines, liquors, etc.

IF FOR NO other reason than to satisfy your curiosity you should visit Nicoll, the Tailor's, and see his fine line of Fall goods just opened.

IF YOU want delicious oysters, Welsh rarebits, chops or steaks after the play visit Lake's Chop House, 618 Sixth avenue. All the appointments are first class.

EFFINGHAM, Inspector of Buildings, speaking of the Hotel Normandie, says: "Every room is a place of security to its occupants as the entire house is absolutely fire proof."

HOOTON'S ICE CREAM has always had the reputation of being made from put cream, and has increased in the best in the city. He makes a specialty of furnishing weddings, parties, families, etc.

ALL who are reapering and redecorating their houses should remember that Buckley, Ninth avenue and Twenty-ninth street, has a fine line of the most fashionable wall papers, etc., at very reasonable prices.

ALL the ladies desire beauty. Mme. Latour claims to be able to obliterate Nature's worst defects, making those who were plain looking before almost beautiful, and adding new beauty to those more favored by Nature.

NOTE.—If you want shirts, collars, cuffs, neckwear, gloves, jewelry, suspenders, underwear, hosiery, umbrellas, canes, hats, travelling bags, or steamer rugs, you can find them in great variety at Ira Perego's. See front page.

R. M. WALTERS, of University place, corner Twelfth street, has scored a triumph by the introduction of his Narrow's Piano for educational purposes in the public schools of New York. Mr. Walters keeps a large assortment of new and second-hand Pianos always on hand, for cash, credit or rent.

THOSE who do not care to take in all the orchestra music between the acts, or want the exercise of a very short walk, will find Mitchell's Cafe, northeast corner Thirty-sixth street and Sixth avenue, a very attractive place. Everything in the line of wine, beer, liquors, etc., of the best.

THE NEW HARDMAN PIANO warerooms, No. 146 Fifth avenue, above Nineteenth street, are very popular as a rendezvous for the best dealers throughout the country while they are in town. The Hardman Piano is now represented by most of the leading firms in the United States. Its claims are based on its merits only.

HAVING made a study of the construction of the banjo, theoretically and practically Mr. D. EMERSON, of 1205 Broadway, is enabled to manufacture an instrument superior to the billions in the market for brilliancy and quality of tone, and excellence of design, finish and durability. These are on sale only at Emerson's instruction parlors and warerooms, which occupy a suite of apartments handsomely furnished and offering separate rooms and the privacy of a home to ladies and children.

THE FISCHER PIANOS are enjoying a very enviable reputation among the leading artists. Clara Louise Kellogg has lately come out for the Fischer Parlor Grand, using the following words to express her appreciation of its merits: "GENTLEMEN: It is with pleasure that I state that the 'Fischer Grand' so kindly furnished for my concert pleased me exceedingly, and I found its tone pure and sympathetic, and of great sustaining quality. Sincerely yours, CLARA LOUISE KELLOGG.

J. E. SEELEY, formerly manager of Ilma Di Murska, J. H. Haverly Opera Co., Silver King Co. &c., is now running the fine stowl cigar store in America at 1295 Broadway, between Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth streets.

Advertisers desiring first-class mediums of communication with the general public, will do well in securing space in the columns of the
as these sheets are distributed in great number each evening of the week, and at the Matinees of Wednesday and Saturday. Every visitor to a Theatre demands a Programme, and a large circulation is, in consequence, absolutely guaranteed. In addition, and what is of far more importance to the Advertising Public, every copy is carried home, and thousands find their way to the most remote and sparsely settled districts, where every line of their contents is read with scrupulous care by every member of the family. That they are

WALTER'S+PIANOS.
R. M. WALTERS'
NARVESEN PIANOS.
The NARVESEN PIANO manufactured by R. M. WALTERS, of 57 and 59 University Place, corner of 12th street, is meeting with great favor from musicians and the public generally. The late General Grafulla, bandmaster 7th Seventh Regiment, used one of these Pianos in his home for fourteen years, until the period of his death. Mr. Walters keeps a large assortment of new and second-hand Pianos always on hand at lowest prices for cash, credit or rent.
57 and 59 UNIVERSITY PLACE.

"What does this mean?" asked a scholar, who had been scanning some lines written by a friend. "Oh," said another, "it doesn't mean anything. It is poetry."

The Spring chicken was on deck. Old bachelor Crusty remarked that it was as tough as leather. "Shoe leather, I suppose," exclaimed the boarder who never laughs.

In Bombay, husbands cut off their wives' noses for punishment. The women in this country are too smart for their husbands. They never talk through their noses.

A Vermont husband got wind of the proposed elopement of his wife, and frustrated it by keeping guard over her silk dress. She wouldn't run away in a calico gown, and he knew it.

SOHMER & CO., PIANOS.

From Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

Sohmer & Co., ranking among the foremost of our first class Piano Manufacturers, have lately again been obliged to enlarge their facilities for the manufacture of their Pianos.

Our representative, on his recent visit to their warerooms, was astonished to see so many customers, contracting for Sohmer Pianos, in spite of the general dull times Mr. Chas Fahr, who Sohmer & Co., in showing him around, stated, that the demand their Pianos is quite extraordinary and specially sought for by the musical profession for their own private use. Their Grand, in particular, (French or "Gem", and patented for them) great attraction, it being the smallest and one ever manufactured, (five feet) and of tone, it rivals the largest Pianos in use.

In conclusion we wish to state that, where testimonial for endurance, perseverance and progress is due at all, it certainly will be awarded to the firm of Sohmer

SPECIAL NOTICE.

This week will be produced Mr. Edward Harrigan's new Local Comedy, entitled, replete with stirring scenes of New York Life. Six New Songs by Mr. Dave Braham. New Scenery, new Costumes, etc. All the old favorites of this Company will be seen in new characters.

Fresh Fashion Notes.

A feature at the recent gay rocutias was the fashion of wearing one side of the tunic turned back, and discovering a lining of either a British or a foreign flag. A costume that was admired was of navy blue serge, with tunic showing on its wrong side the American stars and stripes; the skirt was trimmed with rows of white and light blue braid.

The Bijou Grand Piano.

The Bijou grand piano, manufactured by Sohmer & Co., the well-known piano-makers, is attracting a great deal of attention in musical circles, and a large number of orders have been received from members of the profession. The Bijou is the smallest grand piano made—five feet—and for parlors and private use it tone rivals the larger instruments. The same principles are used which long ago made a known and when a substantially perfected piano, and it requires Sohmer & Co., invariably carry it off.

Mr. Fahr, of Messrs. Sohmer & Co., informed our representative that the demand for the "Sohmer" instruments is an extraordinary one, and that many of our best musicians are now purchasing them for their own use.

Ladies can buy shoe dressings for ten or fifteen cents. Button's Raven Gloss is cheaper at twenty-five cents. It actually makes shoes wear longer.

The great advantage in using Button's Raven Gloss Shoe Dressing is that it makes shoes look new and natural, and will not injure the finest leather. Every lady should use it.

A VERY ACCEPTABLE PRESENT.

For reliable Sealskin Garments at lowest prices, go direct to C. C. Shayne's 103 Prince street.

That all men admire beauty in woman is obvious, and those ladies who are not so well favored as their sisters in that matter are not only fully justified in adding to their charms, but it is almost a duty they owe to their friends and admirers to remedy any slight defects that female flesh is heir to, with this end in view we take great pleasure in calling the attention of our lady readers to the advertisement of Mme. Lavoie, the famous Cosmetician, of 2146 Lexington Ave., New York, who is at the head of her profession as a beautifier of the complexion, and all persons would do well to send for her circular and testimonials.

Haines made a study of the construction of the banjo, theoretically and practically Mr. D. Emmett, of 679 8 th Ave., is enabled to manufacture an instrument superior to anything in the market for brilliancy and quality of tone, and exquisite design, finish and durability. These are on sale only at Emmett's instruction parlors and salesrooms, which occupy a suite of apartments handsomely furnished and offering separate rooms and the privacy of a home to ladies and children.

Messrs. Chas. Smith & Son, of 1436 Third Avenue are the general agents for several of the best home and foreign fire insurance companies. And they also make a specialty of insuring against loss by breakage, etc., of plate glass windows. Parties who desire to take insurance in first-class companies should call upon them.

There are few [illegible] firms doing a larger retail trade than SOHMER & CO. of 149 to 155 5th Ave. It is almost impossible to call at their warerooms any time of the day without finding some person contracting for a SOHMER PIANO.

I could scarcely speak, it was almost impossible to breathe through my nostrils. Using ELY'S CREAM BALM for a short time the trouble entirely disappeared.—J. O. Tichenor, Shoe Merchant, Elizabeth, N. J.

New shoe dressings come and go. Button's Raven Gloss, however, remains the standard because it simply makes the shoes look new, not varnished, and does not injure the leather

The real success of recent piano making is conceded to the Hardman Upright. Price far below that of other and less durable first-class uprights. Warerooms, No. 146 Fifth ave.

NEXT WEEK,

MY JACK.

"My Jack," a sensational melodrama in five acts and twelve scenes, by Benjamin Landeck, will be presented next Monday night. The story of "My Jack" deals with the loves and trials of an English sailor, Jack Meredith and Dorothy Dyscott, a young girl of Cornwall, England. The estate of Grayleigh Manor and the title of Sir Edward Vanleer have been usurped by a cousin of the rightful heir through the supposed drowning of the latter. The proofs to the title have been stolen by Ciro Panitza, a Greek, who blackmails the usurper as the price of the secret. Dorothy Prescott's brother, Charles, is a convict and fugitive from justice. He is in hiding in a ruined mill, and while there discovers the missing papers, which have been secreted there by Ciro Panitza, who arrives on the scene in the first act for the possession of the documents. foils the fugitive and escapes. Jack Meredith is arrested for the murder, and after the trial and acquittal, joins the navy as a captain and sails for Egypt. Ciro Panitza is also on the same vessel as a sailor. Act fourth is in Africa and shows the hero and Ciro lost on the open desert. The latter believing that he is about to die, confesses to the stealing of the papers and to the murder. Act five is again in the little fishing village in Cornwall. Jack Meredith returns to claim his inheritance, and Ciro kills the spurious Sir Edward Vanleer, after which everything ends happily with the marriage of the hero and Dorothy. The play is full of exciting scenes and incidents, and permits of unusual stage display which will be taken full advantage of. The blowing up of the lighthouse and its destruction, the murder in the old mill, the deck of the English gunboat, the Gulf and the scene of the Africa desert, are marvels of sensational realism.

Very Absent Minded.

This story was told by a woman about her father. He was in his library and his cries brought the whole family to the room. They hurried in and found him near his favorite table, poking under it and around it among his papers and everywhere with his walking stick. When some one asked him what he was looking for, he only continued to poke with his stick.

Finally he turned in disgust and said: "Some one will have to find it for me. I laid it up against my desk. It slipped down to the floor, and I thought I picked it up; but I don't seem to be able to find it now." "What is it you are looking for?" asked his daughter. "Why, my stick, child," cried the old gentleman, "and I don't see where it can be." Of course the stick which he was thrusting into the waste paper basket and into every corner was the one for which he was searching.—New York Tribune.

A NOTE OF INTRODUCTION.

Dear JOHN MORIARTY, I write this in verse,
And hope you won't say, that you never saw worse:
If there's pith in the rhyme, 'tis that same you'll enjoy,
You're a bit of a poet, yourself, my dear boy;
So now I'll proceed it, without further excuse,
And my cousin, Tom Fay, through this note introduces.

He has a young wife and two boys, boomers both;
You never saw finer ones John on my oath;
And as for the prospects he furnish adorn,
So it is for that reason I send him to you.
And I think and believe—yes, I'd wager a V,
You'll treat him the same as you always have me.

My cousin's a sober industrious man,
But not overburdened with wealth, so your PLAN
Will suit him far better than buying for cash,
And as prices that suit rival yours, getting cash
EASY PAYMENTS to you his finances won't break,
He'll get furniture, neat, cheap, of excellent make.

I've given him your NUMBER, ONE, AVENUE FOUR,
And to-morrow, I think, he'll drop in at your store.
Depend on your money; he's good as pure gold,
An honester fellow this City don't hold.
He pays all his debts, whenever they're due—
At least, I know well that he has hitherto.

But, if he, perchance, should be without work,
I know you won't act like a crusty old Turk,
But give him a month to recuperate in;
Be assured at its end he'll appear with the "tin."
You did it for me, and you'd do it to-day,
So now I'll subscribe myself,
Yours,
WILLIAM FAY.

(Editorial from the "New Yorker Staats-Zeitung.")

THE EVOLUTION OF A GREAT HOUSE.

ALL organic creation of nature belonging to the highest order have approached their perfection gradually, and the period of this development embraces about one-third of the life of the species. Only in exceptional cases is this rule violated. This formula of nature applies as well to the spiritual and moral development as it does to the physical. The moral law that it was by the means of work only that the gods succeeded, and Lessing established the aphorism that "talent" means "work and will." With these two elements—work and will—even the highest aims can be attained and the greatest difficulties overcome. He who attains an aim has conquered in this struggle for existence; he survives as the strongest and the fittest.

The observations of all intelligent persons have let them distinctly to notice that these truths apply to the development of art and the evolutions of all kinds of art industries, which have become particularly interesting for the reason that they have engaged the attention of such a large number of talented individuals. As soon as any great success has been achieved in one of these sub-divisons of industrial life, the advantages and the gain that accrue attract competition, and necessarily intensify the struggle for existence.

As an application of an individual case, we can instance the situation of the young firm of Sohmer & Co. about fifteen years ago. Piano manufacturing already ranked high among the art industries of the country; both in regard to the quality of pianos made and the enormous amount of capital invested. To embark in an enterprise in this field called for great courage and confidence—courage in recognizing the difficulties that would be encountered, and confidence in the ability ultimately to achieve success. Indeed, Messrs. Sohmer & Co., by entering the list of competitors in the Universal exposition of 1876, in Philadelphia, where they at once won a place of honor among old established firms, demonstrated to the world that they were endowed with these necessary attributes of success.

Looking back at their history, we find that this was the only episode in their career that can be attributed to luck, and that the firm knew how to avail themselves of it, through increased activity and indefatigable work, is acknowledged at the present time both in Europe and in this country. The result was that they soon doubled and then trebled their production of finished instruments. In an unprecedented manner they disclose the ability to force recognition of their worth and the value of the article with which their name is connected so intimately.

In furtherance of the plan and the scope of their operations, and without being or appearing to be obtrusive, they understood how to utilize the public temper and where speech or the printing press did not suffice to enlarge the environment of their fame they had recourse to art, and necessarily sought the aid of the artist. It was no less a person than Mr. Joseph Keppler, who with his pencil depicted in brilliant strokes the triumph of the firm, and while honoring them honored himself. Who does not remember those humorous cartoons, attracting at the same time the earnest attention of the people in which Franz Liszt and, again, Bismarck were depicted as sitting before a Sohmer Grand?

What on these occasions the art of drawing and coloring accomplished as a well-earned tribute to merit, the mouthpiece of public opinion—the daily, as well as the periodical press—indorsed in numberless instances without the slightest hesitation. The Sohmers, one is almost prompted to say, are favorites of the press. They have never found it necessary to make use of apologetic puffs, as is usual in their branch of business, but, like cultured people, whenever they sent their card to the press it was favorably received, and to day the press returns its compliments in the same manner.

The growth of this establishment, even in this progressive land, is almost without parallel. From making 150 instruments per year, as they did in the beginning, the firm now actually make and finish 2,000 pianos annually, and employ about 350 workmen all the year round. Their factory building is located in Astoria, its dimensions being 100 feet front, 200 feet deep, and six stories high. The lumber-yards have an area of 30,000 square feet, but this does not represent all the space devoted to their establishment, as on the corner of Fourteenth Street and Third Avenue, they occupy in addition to their splendid warerooms, a four-story edifice, in which can be found the polishers and tuners of the firm, who add the last finishing touches to the upright and concert grand pianos that are shipped by the firm to all points of the compass. Square pianos, while not few people of musical taste now fancy, do not figure very largely in piano-making at this date.

As to the artistic value of these instruments, no weightier evidence can be adduced in their favor than that of the constantly increasing demand for them. No salesrooms in this line of business are so constantly crowded with purchasers, pianists, music teachers, and others interested in music, than are those of Sohmer & Co. With his natural suavity and pleasing manners, the senior member of the firm, Mr. Hugo Sohmer can be seen imparting information to both friends and strangers, and here also may be seen Mr. Joseph Kuder the technical superintendent, as well as Mr. Charles Fahr, who has charge of the finances and advertising and Mr. George Reichmann in charge of the warerooms, as chief salesman. To what extent this immense work has been subdivided by these four partners, whose efforts have attained such gratifying results, can hardly be comprehended by the layman. The music trade press has paid a great and worthy tribute to their restless energy, to their indefatigable thought, and activity, which are now universally recognized by all who come in contact with them.

In accordance with the rules adopted to perfect their relations with the outer world, the firm have also thoroughly adjusted their own internal organization. The four men who compose the firm represent an absolutely united body; united not by blind chance, but by the conscious feeling and the thorough knowledge of their high aims and purposes. It needs only a superficial observation to perceive that here exists a spirit of harmony seldom met elsewhere, in spheres where men are supposed to co-operate for a common result.

This is one of the reasons why the firm exercise such powerful influence upon their outside representatives, and through them upon the industry of the world at large, and the masses from whom the piano purchasers are drawn; and these very influences make their relations to their competitors a unique example of the result of the highest mercantile ethics applied particularly to a line of industry in which the founding of the firm of Sohmer & Co. had already reached a highly flourishing state, making it exceedingly difficult for beginners to enter the field. The success of this house appears in contrast yet more brilliant, and places its members in the most favorable light. This light becomes the more intense, in view of the fact that since the establishment of the firm, a number of financial crises have swept over the land, throwing obstacles in the path of great enterprises, and crippling countless numbers of them. The labor troubles also, which in many cases paralyzed industry—and a few months ago this particular industry—must be taken into consideration. These disturbances did not affect the house of Sohmer & Co. The business tact and commercial knowledge of the members of the firm enable them successfully to encounter at any time, financial emergencies and workingmen's demands, the latter always being met by them in a spirit of conciliation, without which industry does not seem to be able to prosper.

Whoever carefully considers the remarkable career of this firm will understand how the house of Sohmer & Co. has reached its present pinnacle of fame.

From the "NEW YORK TIMES."

"Exceptional durability, combined with perfection of touch and tone, make the Sohmer Piano peculiarly adapted to the use of pupils and teachers in establishments where piano playing is taught."

From the "NEW YORK WORLD."

"The history of this firm in latter years, and the wonderful durability combined with perfection of tone and touch, of the square, upright and grand Pianos, are known to hundreds of musicians, and in thousands of homes all over the world."

From the "NEW YORK SUN."

"Messrs. Sohmer & Co. are a progressive house, and their constant aim has been always to gratify the desires of their many customers."

From the "NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW."

"The laurels of the firm of Sohmer & Co. have been justly earned and deservedly bestowed."

From "PUCK."

"The name of Sohmer & Co. upon a piano is a guarantee of its excellence."

From "JUDGE"

"Any person wishing to purchase a strictly first-class piano, is advised to visit the salesroom of Sohmer & Co., 149–155 E. 14th St., New York City."

From "FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER."

"The name of Sohmer & Co. has become a synonym for liberality and enterprise throughout both continents, and the future of the house cannot fail to worthily sustain the past record and achievement."

NEXT WEEK,

MY JACK.

"My Jack," a sensational melodrama in five acts and twelve scenes, by Benjamin Landeck, will be presented next Monday night. The story of "My Jack" deals with the loves and trials of an English sailor. Jack Meredith and Dorothy Prescott, a young girl of Cornwall, England. The estate of Graylegh Manor and the title of Sir Edward Vanberg have been usurped by a cousin of the rightful heir through the supposed drowning of the latter. The proofs to the title have been stolen by Ciro Panitza, a Greek, who blackmails the usurper as the price of the secret. Dorothy Prescott's brother, Charles, is a convict and fugitive from justice. He is in hiding in a ruined mill, and while there discovers the missing papers, which have been secreted there by Ciro Panitza, who arrives on the scene, and in the struggle for the possession of the documents, kills the fugitive and escapes. Jack Meredith is arrested for the murder, and after the trial and acquittal, joins the navy as a captain and sails for Egypt. Ciro Panitza is also on the same vessel as a sailor. Act fourth is in Africa and shows the hero and Ciro lost on the open desert. The latter believing that he is about to die, confesses to the stealing of the papers and to the murder. Act five is again in the little fishing village in Cornwall. Jack Meredith returns to claim his inheritance, and Ciro kills the spurious Sir Edward Vanberg, after which everything ends happily with the marriage of the hero and Dorothy. The play is full of exciting scenes and incidents, and permits of unusual stage display which will be taken full advantage of. The blowing up of the lighthouse and its destruction, the murder in the old mill, the deck of the English gunboat, Sea Gull, and the scene of the African desert, are marvels of sensational realism.

Very Absent Minded.

This story was told by a woman about her father. He was in his library and his cries brought the whole family to the room. They hurried in and found him near his favorite table, poking under it and around it among his papers and everywhere with his walking stick. When some one asked him what he was looking for, he only continued to poke with his stick.

Finally he turned in disgust and said: "Some one will have to find it for me. I laid it up against my desk. It slipped down to the floor, and I thought I picked it up; but I don't seem to be able to find it now." "What is it you are looking for?" asked his daughter. "Why, my stick, child," cried the old gentleman, "and I don't see where it can be." Of course the stick which he was thrusting into the waste paper baskot and into every corner was the one for which he was searching.—New York Tribune.

A NOTE OF INTRODUCTION.

Dear JOHN MORIARTY, I write this in verse,
And hope you won't say, that you never saw worse.
If there's pith in the rhyme, 'tis that same you'll enjoy,
You're a bit of a poet, yourself, my dear boy;
So now I'll proceed, without further excuse,
And introduce, Tom Fay, through this note introduce.

He has a young wife and two boys, bouncers both;
You never saw finer ones John on my oath;
And his flat he proposes to furnish anew,
So it is for that reason I send him to you.
And I think and believe, yes, I'd wager a V,
You'll treat him the same as you always have me.

My cousin's a sober industrious man,
But is overburdened with wealth, so your PLAN
Will suit him far better than buying for cash,
And as guess that soul I gladly am, getting trash.
EASY PAYMENTS is yer big finance won't break,
He'll get furniture, neat, cheap, of excellent make.

I've given him your NUMBER, ONE, AVE-NUE FOUR,
And to-morrow, I think, he'll drop in at your store;
Depend on your money he's good as pure gold,
Ah however fellow tips clip, don't hold.
He pay all his debts, whatever they be due—
At least, I know well that he one hitherto.

But, if he, perchance, should be without work,
I kn ow you won't act like a crusty old Turk,
But give him a month to congregate in;
Be assured at its end he'll appear with the tin.
You did it for me, and you'd do it to-day;
So now I'll subscribe myself,
Yours
WILLIAM FAY.

(Editorial from the "New Yorker Staats-Zeitung.")

THE EVOLUTION OF A GREAT HOUSE.

ALL organic creation of nature belonging to the highest order have approached their perfection gradually, and the period of this development embraces about one-third of the life of the species. Only in exceptional cases is this rule violated. This formula of nature applies as well to the spiritual and moral development as it does to the physical. The poet says that it was by the means of work only that the gods succeeded, and Lessing established the aphorism that "talent" means "work and will." With these two elements—work and will—even the highest aims can be attained and the greatest difficulties overcome. He who attains an aim has conquered in this struggle for existence; he survives as the strongest and the fittest.

The observations of all intelligent persons have led them distinctly to notice these truths apply to the development of art and the evolutions of all kinds of art industries, which have become particularly interesting for the reason that they have engaged the attention of such a large number of talented individuals. As soon as any great success has been achieved in one of these sub-divisions of industrial life, the advantages and the gain that accrue attract competition, and necessarily intensify the struggle for existence.

As an application of an individual case, we can instance the situation of the young firm of Sohmer & Co. about fifteen years ago. Piano manufacturing already ranked high among the art industries of the country, both in regard to the quality of pianos made and the enormous amount of capital invested. To embark in an enterprise in this field called for great courage and confidence—courage in recognizing the difficulties that would be encountered, and confidence in the ability ultimately to achieve success. Indeed, Messrs. Sohmer & Co., by entering the list of competitors in the Universal exposition of 1876, in Philadelphia, where they at once won a place of honor among old established firms, demonstrated to the world that they were endowed with these necessary attributes of success.

Looking back at their history, we find that this was the only episode in their career that can be attributed to luck, and that the firm knew how to avail themselves of it, through increased activity and indefatigable work, is acknowledged at the present time both in Europe and in this country. The result was that they soon doubled and then trebled their production of finished instruments. In an unprecedented manner they disclose the ability to force recognition of their worth and the value of the article with which their name is connected so intimately.

In furtherance of the plan and the scope of their operations, and without being or appearing to be obtrusive, they understood how to utilize the public temper and where speech or the printing press did not suffice to enlarge the environment of their fame they had recourse to art, and necessarily sought the aid of the artist. It was no less a person than Mr. Joseph Keppler, who with his pencil depicted in brilliant strokes the triumph of the firm, and while honoring them honored himself. Who does not remember those humorous cartoons, attracting at the same time the earnest attention of the people in which Franz Liszt and, again, Bismarck were depicted as sitting before a Sohmer Grand!

What on these occasions the art of drawing and coloring accomplished as a well-earned tribute to merit, the monthpiece of public opinion—the daily, as well as the periodical press—indorsed in numerous instances without the slightest hesitation. Sohmers, one is almost prompted to say, are favorites of the press. They have never found it necessary to make use of apologetic puffs, as is usual in their branch of business, but, like cultured people, whenever they sent their card to the press it was favorably received, and to day the press returns its compliments to them.

The growth of this establishment, even in this progressive land, is almost without parallel. From making 150 instruments per year, as they did in the beginning, the firm now actually make and finish 3,000 pianos annually, and employ about 350 workmen all the year round. Their factory building is located in Astoria, its dimensions being 100 feet front, 200 feet deep, and six stories high. The lumber-yards have an area of 30,000 square feet, but this does not represent all the space devoted to their establishment, for on the corner of Fourteenth Street and Third Avenue, they occupy in addition to their splendid warerooms a four-story edifice, in which can be found the polishers and tuners of the firm, who add the last finishing touches to the parlor grand, upright and concert grand pianos that are shipped by the firm to all points of the compass. Square pianos, which but few people of musical taste now fancy, do not figure very largely in piano-making at this date.

As to the artistic value of these instruments, no weightier evidence can be adduced in their favor than that of the constantly increasing demand for them No salesrooms in this line of business are so constantly crowded with pianists, music teachers, and others interested in music, than are those of Sohmer & Co. With his natural suavity and pleasing manners, the senior member of the firm, Mr. Hugo Sohmer can be seen imparting information to both friends and strangers, and here also may be seen Mr. Joseph Kuder the technical superintendent, as well as Mr. Charles Fahr, who has charge of the finances and advertising and Mr. George Reichmann in charge of the warerooms, as chief salesman. To what extent this immense work has been subdivided by these four partners, whose efforts have attained such gratifying results, can hardly be comprehended by the layman. The music trade press has paid a great and worthy tribute to their restless energy, to their indefatigable thought, and activity, which are now universally recognized by all who come in contact with them.

In accordance with the rules adopted to perfect their relations with the outer world, the firm have also thoroughly adjusted their own internal organization. The four men who compose the firm represent an absolutely united body; united not by blind chance, but by the conscious feeling and the thorough knowledge of their high aims and purposes. It needs only a superficial observation to perceive that here exists a spirit of harmony seldom met elsewhere, in spheres where men are supposed to co-operate for a common result.

This is one of the reasons why the firm exercise such powerful influence upon their outside representatives, and through them upon the industry of the world at large, and the masses from whom the piano purchasers are drawn; and these very influences make their relations to their competitors a unique example of the result of the highest mercantile ethics applied particularly to a line of industry in which the competition is so acute.

Considering, as we have already stated, that the piano business at the time of the founding of the firm of Sohmer & Co. had already reached a highly flourishing state, making it exceedingly difficult for beginners to enter the field, the success of this house appears in contrast yet more brilliant, and places its members in the most favorable light. This light becomes the more intense, in view of the fact that since the establishment of the firm, a number of financial crises have swept over the land, throwing obstacles in the path of great enterprise, and crippling countless numbers of them. The labor troubles also, which in many cases paralyzed industry—and a few months ago this particular industry—must be taken into consideration. These disturbances did not affect the house of Sohmer & Co. The business tact and commercial knowledge of the members of the firm enable them successfully to encounter at any time, financial emergencies and workingmen's demands, the latter always being met by them in a spirit of conciliation, without which industry does not seem to be able to prosper.

Whoever carefully considers the remarkable career of this firm will understand how the house of Sohmer & Co. has reached its present pinnacle of fame.

From the "NEW YORK TIMES."

"Exceptional durability, combined with perfection of touch and tone, make the Sohmer Piano peculiarly adapted to the use of pupils and teachers in establishments where piano playing is taught."

From the "NEW YORK WORLD."

"The history of this firm in latter years, and the wonderful durability combined with perfection of tone and touch, of the square, upright and grand Pianos, are known to hundreds of musicians, and in thousands of homes all over the world."

From the "NEW YORK SUN."

"Messrs. Sohmer & Co. are a progressive house, and their constant aim has been always to gratify the desires of their many customers."

From the "NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW."

"The laurels of the firm of Sohmer & Co. have been justly earned and cheerfully bestowed."

From "PUCK."

"The name of Sohmer & Co. upon a piano is a guarantee of its excellence."

From "JUDGE"

"Any person wishing to purchase a strictly first-class piano, is advised to visit the salesroom of Sohmer & Co., 149–155 E. 14th St., New York City."

From "FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER."

"The name of Sohmer & Co. has become a synonym for liberality and enterprise throughout both continents, and the future of the house cannot fail to worthily sustain the past record and achievement."

A LUCKY ITHACAN.

Alonzo C. Edwards Draws $5,000 in The Louisiana State Lottery.

Learning this morning that there was no doubt but what Alonzo C. Edwards was the lucky Ithacan who held one-twentieth of ticket No 31,859 which drew the second capital prize of $10,000 in the drawing of the Louisiana State Lottery held on the 11th inst., our reporter at noon to-day, called at his residence to learn the truth of the matter.

Mr. Edwards is a hard-working mason who has lived in Ithaca twenty years, and has no real estate of his own, and rents the south end of the one story, unpainted house, marked No. 79 on Linn Street. Mr. Edwards was just returning from his work as our reporter reached the house and he was asked if he was the lucky holder of the above mentioned ticket, and he smilingly said that he was.

"Have you received the money?" asked the reporter.

"If seeing is believing, you can look at the draft that I received this morning," and Mr. Edwards took from his pocket a draft on New York which was as good as gold, the face value being $4,995, five dollars being deducted for cost of draft.

"I suppose," said the reporter, "that this money comes very convenient at this time."

"Indeed it does. I was a little surprised when I saw in the list of prizes that I had drawn $5,000. I paid a dollar for the ticket; though I have purchased several this year. I mean now to have a snug little home of my own, and make my family as comfortable as possible. There are five of us, myself, wife and three little girls," and he pointed to his family group who stood near the window, all of whom looked very happy at the good fortune that had fallen to the

"Shall you try your luck again?" asked the reporter.

NEXT WEEK

SHADOWS OF A GREAT CITY

Will be presented before the patrons of the People's Theatre for one week, with the regular Wednesday and Saturday matinees. Originally produced at McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, for five consecutive weeks in 1884. It has since that time been successfully presented in all the leading theatres throughout this country, and was recently produced at the Theatre Royal, Melbourne, Australia. The play is under the management of Chas. B. Jefferson, Thos. Jefferson, (sons of Jos. Jefferson, and L. R. Shewell, and will be presented by a cast marvelously adapted to the requirements of the characters of the drama, the admirable scenic effects, specially constructed for this play, are a marked and impressive feature, all the scenery and properties necessary to its production being carried by the company, and are of the most costly and elaborate character. The tour of the "Shadows of a Great City" has been a grand universal ovation wherever it has been produced, notably New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Washington, Baltimore, Pittsburgh and San Francisco. "Shadows of a Great City is thoroughly original in its plot, its situations and clearly defined characters. Its scenic surrounding are elaborate and beautiful, and some of the more prominent effects are realistic to a degree rarely seen on the stage. The story is compactly and gracefully told in the dialogue and the action is brisk. The incidents follow one another naturally and effectively.

The best men that we know;
That they may govern rightly,
With Vigor and with Vim,
And stand by the old motto,
"May the best Americans win!"

III There is another duty,
A duty sacred, too,
Which should be your ambition,
And mine the same as you,
To have your home well furnished,
And when you do begin,
Just sing the good old motto,
"May the best Americans win!"

IV. Then go to Moriarty
At One on Avenue
And there get Special Credit,
As lots have done before;
You'll fine it easy doing,
For 'tis the very thing.
Next to that grand old motto,
"May the best Americans win!"

Oh, come, fair Columbia, and turn from the crowd
Of political combatants, clamoring loud;
Oh, leave them to bicker and quarrel and jar,
Like the flats and the sharps that they frequently are,

And turn to the instrument perfect, complete,
That beats Time himself, and can never be beat;
For the SOHMER PIANO, as certain as fate,
Is "the ticket" to win, for the year '88!

THE P. S. GILMORE GREAT CONCERT TROUPE USE A MAGNIFICENT "SOHMER" PIANO AT THEIR CONCERTS WITH IMMENSE SUCCESS.—THE "SOHMER" PIANO ENDORSED WITH THE HIGHEST PRAISE THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES BY ALL WHO HEAR IT.

Messrs. Sohmer & Co. have received another evidence of the growing popularity of their fine instruments.

The P. S. Gilmore Concert Company, who have been giving concerts all over the country to packed houses, and everywhere have been received with the greatest enthusiasm, have been using a "SOHMER" PIANO at all of their concerts, and this instrument has received, on each occasion on which it was heard, the highest praise from the public and the press.

The newspapers have commented in the most flattering terms on this popular instrument, and Mr. P. S. Gilmore and his artists have not only become enthusiastic over its merits, but are so attached to the "Sohmer" piano that in one of their special cars, which contains every luxury and convenience and which is aptly called a "Palace on Wheels," they have in constant use a beautiful "Sohmer" Piano.

Messrs. Sohmer & Co. have had an opportunity by these concerts to have their piano tested by the most critical musicians and also by the public and press, and it has not only stood the test well, but the "Sohmer" Piano has come out with all honors and flying colors, which will help to add more distinction to the glory and fame of the house.

Important Information Concerning Vaseline

We are sorry to say that some druggists palm off on their customers a cheap imitation which they claim to be genuine and some even go so far as to buy up our empty bottles from junk-dealers and fill them with the imitation. How can anybody hope to get any benefit from such worthless stuff? As it is difficult for the public to tell the imitation from the real, the only safety lies in accepting only original bottles packed in our circulars and card-board boxes, refusing anything else, no matter what the druggist says, nor how persuasive he may be. In this way only can you be sure of getting the best remedy known to the world.

The Eminent Author and Actor,

Mr. Frank Mayo,

Will appear in his New Successful Romantic Drama,

THE ROYAL GUARD.

A Romantic Drama in 6 Acts and 7 Tableaux by FRANK MAYO and JOHN G. WILSON, authors of "NORDECK," founded on Alexander Dumas' Romance, "Les Trois Mousquetaires."

"THE ROYAL GUARD."

Dumas' celebrated romance, "Les Trois Mousquetaires," is equally familiar to boys and graybeards, and the character of the fiery fighting Gascon, D'Artagnan, has long had a place in the hearts of all who have read his adventures. Frank Mayo and John G. Wilson's play, entitled "The Royal Guard," embraces both of Dumas' novels, "The Three Guardsmen," and the sequel, "The Four Musketeers." The subject matter principally is the arrival of D'Artagnan in Paris in rags, with "Bobby," his sword, and a letter, which is stolen from him; his triple duel with Athos, Porthos and Aramis; his securing of the diamond studs, and his game of cards with Richelieu. When it is remembered how much time is covered, incidents occur and space traveled—the work of years being condensed into three hours—the cleverness of Messrs. Mayo and Wilson's work will be recognized. Dumas' novel, while being intensely dramatic per se, is not good material for the playwright, being sketchy, and yet out of this has been evolved a compact, entertaining, interesting, heart-touching, visible tickling drama, the action of which never flags from the moment the curtain rises until it falls upon the picture at the close. An apology is due right here. Lack of space forbids recital of what is meritorious in the play, and it is all good. As for Mayo's acting, a column of praise would not suffice. The man who created "Nordeck"—a remarkable character—scarcely needs commendation, but with all the grandeur of that part, the utter absence of that indicated acting last night forced the opinion that Mayo never did better work.—N. Y. Daily News, Jan. 8, 1885.

The Name of SOHMER & CO has become a synonym for liberality and enterprise throughout both continents, and the future of the house cannot fail to worthily sustain the past record and achievements.

From Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

REMARKABLE RECORD OF SUCCESS, THE PIANO OF THE MUSICIAN

The firm of Sohmer & Co. are regarded not alone by the piano trade, but in business circles generally, as one of the most enterprising and deservedly successful houses in the business. Starting in 1872, with limited facilities, and passing safely the early stages of its existence through a period of unprecedented financial depression, this house, though it has had to contend with established concerns of many years' experience and almost unlimited resources has by the exercise of business tact and through the merit of its instruments won for itself a leading position in the piano trade.

It is due to the skill and care exhibited in the construction of these instruments and their consequent strength, durability and unsurpassed musical qualities that the limited production of 15 years ago has expanded into its present large production.

Where they then made four pianos, their present average production reaches the high figure of 40 pianos per week, and is yet insufficient to supply the extensive demand, and the firm is to-day largely in arrears of its orders. The Sohmer piano combines a rich, pure tone of great volume and sympathetic quality with a precision, delicacy, and responsiveness of touch seldom found in other instruments, and these characteristics have not only made it popular with performers generally, but have also made it the prime favorite among artists for both concert and private use.

This firm makes every variety of instruments, square, upright and grand, and constantly striving to meet every demand, has produced the Bijou Grand, the smallest grand piano ever made, the most practical novelty yet presented to the public.

This instrument, while occupying little space, has great power and volume of tone, together with the tone-sustaining quality and elastic touch heretofore only found in the concert grand.

Exceptional durability, combined with perfection of tone and touch, make the Sohmer piano peculiarly adapted to the use of pupils and teachers in establishments where piano playing is taught.

The writer some time since, through the courtesy of Mr. Fahr, who has general charge of the financial affairs of the house, had an opportunity of visiting the factory, and the tour was a source of as much surprise as gratification.

When in 1879 the old factory on Fourteenth Street was found to be too small to accommodate the business it was enlarged by taking in the house, numbered from 148 to 155 on that street. Very soon this was found to be insufficient to meet the demand, and the works were transferred to Twenty-third street but on a considerably larger scale, while the salesroom, which now requires considerable space, remains on Fourteenth Street.

While Sohmer & Co. have relied upon the inherent value of their instrument rather than upon the oftimes factitious advertisements obtained from Exposition awards, they have yet received the highest distinction in many exhibitions, notably: Philadelphia, 1876; Montreal, 1881-2, and at Minneapolis and Sacramento, and they can point with pride to the magnificent indorsement their instruments have received at the hands of the best native and visiting musicians, prominent among whom are Ed. Neupert and Gottschalk, the celebrated composers and pianists, and other native and visiting artists. It is not, therefore, surprising that the name of Sohmer & Co., upon a piano has become a guarantee for its excellence.—From the New York Times.

When the greatest of Leaders his baton upraises
All Europe breaks forth into Harmony's praises
And a Sonora piano, 'mid wild acclamations
Is chosen for use at the "Concert of Nations."

The above picture illustrates, in a most well-devised manner, the preeminent position of the Sohmer Piano among the rival makes. As the iron Bismarck, the director of Europe's future, uses his baton with a firm hand, and again and again restores the harmony of the European concert, thus the Sohmer Piano holds dominion over the concert hall of to-day, and is preferred by leading artists to express the harmonic feeling of music in full, clear, sympathetic tones.

As shown in the picture, the Sohmer Piano will create harmony in the halls of the millionaire as well as in the parlor of the well-to-do citizen.

A LEADING PIANO HOUSE.

Almost immediately after the birth of the now great firm of SOHMER & CO., in 1872, came the memorable business depression of a year later. This fatal year proved the disastrous ruin of many long-established firms, but when the sun burst clear once more above the clouds of business panic the young firm came out unharmed. This house which owes its rise to separate and absolutely unique position in the piano trade, was striving manfully without pretense to supply instruments of strength, durability and unsurpassed musical qualities. And it was not long before the critical patrons of other establishments recognized the merits of the young firm and the Sohmer piano had gained its merited fame. From a limited production of four pianos the business rapidly outgrew its bounds, until now no less than forty beautiful instruments are made ready for shipment each week. To keep pace with the ever growing demand an enormous factory has been built in Astoria, L. I., occupying 250 feet of the river front, facing Eighty-fifth street, New York, while the great salesrooms number from 149 to 155 East Fourteenth street. Around this six story giant of masonry has grown up a little village of workmen. Here they labor and here they have their homes, under the shadow of the great industry which earns a livelihood for hundreds of men. Scattered through the town are the various auxiliary workshops which have been added as the pressure of business increased. It is at Astoria that the famous Sohmer pianos are made. They combine a rich, pure tone of great volume and rare quality with a delicacy and sympathetic responsiveness of touch seldom found in other instruments. This is especially true of the Bijou Grand—the smallest grand piano ever made—which has already alone earned a proud reputation for its makers. The history of this firm in later years and the wonderful durability, combined with perfection of tone and touch of the square, upright and grand pianos, are known to hundreds of musicians and in thousands of homes all over the world, while the collection of prize medals from scores of expositions attest the indorsement of the ablest critics.—New York World.

FROM THE NEW YORK SUN.

The SOHMER pianos are the centre of attraction in the musical department of the present Chicago Exposition, where throngs of visitors are constantly gathered around them, charmed with the rich pure tone of the instruments on exhibition. It frequently happens that all the celebrated makes are being performed upon at once, but amid this vast melody, as musicians say, the magnificient tones of the Sohmer swell out in sweet and sympathetic individuality, excelling all others.

Messrs. Sohmer & Co. are a progressive house, and their constant aim has been always to gratify the desire of their many customers.

"NOBODY'S CLAIM."

Boston Daily Globe.—"Nobody's Claim," a drama of abundant life and many an exciting situation, was presented at the Howard last evening. The house was packed to the doors and there seemed to be an epidemic of enthusiasm at the special scenes of the play. "Nobody's Claim," which introduces the hero, Mr. Joseph Dowling, is the work of E. A. Locke, the author of "A Messenger from Jarvis Section." The piece derives its name from a mining claim of untold wealth, the heir to which cannot be found until the hero, after much trial and tribulation, discovers it. Miss Sadie Hasson is the rough, uncouth mountain girl, with sterling virtue hidden beneath the dross; she was vivacious and agile, and created much applause by her witty sayings. Joseph J. Dowling as the hero gave a very finished performance, never overacting his part.

Philadelphia Times.—"Nobody's Claim" was given last evening to a very large house. The piece has been seen here before and therefore calls for no special comment. It is very cleverly acted, Mr. J. J. Dowling and Miss Sadie Hasson carrying off the honors. It is given an elaborate setting and will be repeated every evening and matinees.

WON AND LOST $3,000.

How J. A. Clercy Sold his Louisiana Lottery Ticket and the Purchasers got $5,000 for One Dollar.

"Five thousand dollars for an investment of one dollar is a fully good return, is it not?" asked a gentleman of a News reporter.

"Well, rather," was the reply. "Who was so fortunate as to make a turn of that kind?"

"Mr. J. A. Clercy of 1,008 Washington ave., in this city," was the answer.

Armed with this piece of intelligence, the reporter sought Mr. Clercy. At his residence he was informed that Mr. Clercy was connected with the Morrisaua Silk Manufacturing Co., and thither he proceeded.

"Is Mr. Clercy in?" was asked.

"He is sir. I will call him."

A few moments later Mr. Clercy appeared. In answer to a question from the reporter he said:

"Yes, my name is J. A. Clercy, and I bought the one-fifth of ticket 28,803 in the September drawing of the Louisiana State Lottery. I have bought a number of those tickets but never having drawn anything, I had come to look upon the whole scheme as a fraud."

"When did you first know that the ticket had drawn a prize?"

"I saw it published in 'The Daily News' of September 17."

"Did you have any difficulty in collecting the money?"

"None in the world. I went to Adams Express office in 42d st., and gave them the ticket for collection they charging me one-half of one per cent. The Lottery officers in New Orleans paid the prize in full."

"How long after was it before you received the money?"

"About eight days."

"Well, I suppose you feel pretty good over your investment?"

"No. I can't say I do."

"I did get the money, and I didn't get it. You see I told you that I believed the whole thing was a fraud. There were two young friends of mine, good fellows, who work hard for a living, who offered to buy it from me, and I sold it to them each one putting in fifty cents. And so they came up and got $2,500 for fifty cents."

"Yes, saw the commission which was paid the express company for collection."

"I understand. When you took your ticket to the express office did they object to collecting it?"

"On the contrary, they told me that their collections of prizes drawn in the Louisiana Lotte y averaged $15,000 a month. This, to me a matter of course, applies only to the 42d st. office. What is done elsewhere is only a mere matter of conjecture on my part."

"Well what do you think of the Louisiana Lott ry now?"

"Naturally, I am count ced that it is an honestly conducted institution, and that they do precisely what they advertise to do. But luck has been against me even now."—New York Daily News Sept. 20.

Messrs. Sohmer & Co., the now so deservedly popular manufacturers of first-class pianos, have again been obliged to enlarge their several establishments. Our representative, who lately called on the firm, was quite astonished to see so many customers crowding their warerooms, certainly an unusual sight in these "hard times." Mr. Fahey, of Messrs. Sohmer & Co., informed our representative that the demand for the "Sohmer" instruments is an extraordinary one, and that many of our best musicians are now purchasing them for their own use. The new Bijou, the smallest "Grand" ever built, patented by Messrs. Sohmer & Co., is universally admired, and has a gigantic sale. This instrument is a "Bijou" (Jewel) in the fullest sense of the word; it is small and neat, and possesses a richness of tone hardly surpassed by the largest Grand. It is an indisputable fact that Messrs. Sohmer & Co. are manufacturing none but the very best of instruments. They are a progressive firm, and their constant aim is to gratify the desires to their customers.—N. Y. News.

THE CELEBRATED

SOHMER PIANOS

Are at present the most popular AND Preferred by the Leading Artists.

The enviable position SOHMER & CO. hold among American Piano Manufacturers is solely due to the merits of their instruments. There are comparatively few makers in this country who can claim such a rapid recognition in so short a time from the leading critics and connoisseurs. They are used in Conservatories, Schools and Seminaries, and the Concert Room, on account of their volume and purity, their richness and singing quality. The TOUCH or ACTION, of the SOHMER Piano is RESPONSIVE, and unites with absolute PRECISION, a DELICACY and PLIABILITY seldom found. The workmanship of the SOHMER Piano is shown in the perfect finish of every part, and in the skilled use of the best material, resulting in a product no less pleasing to the eye than durable.

Musical authorities and critics prefer the SOHMER Pianos, and they are purchased by those possessing refined musical taste and appreciating the highest quality of tone and the highest perfection generally in a Piano.

THE SOHMER PIANOS ARE USED IN THE FOLLOWING INSTITUTIONS:

N. Y. COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
VOGT'S CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
VILLA MARIA CONVENT, Montreal,
VILLA DE SALES CONVENT, Long Island,
N. Y. NORMAL CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
PHILADELPHIA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.
And most all the leading first-class theatres in NEW YORK and BROOKLYN.

Received First Prize Centennial Exhibition, Philadelphia, 1876.

—Wife: "The flour is out." Husband: "So is my money." Wife: "The coal is gone." Husband: "So is my credit." Wife: "Well, we can't starve." Husband: "Can't we? That's good. I was afraid we would."

—"No, indeed; there's no place like home," sighed the married man who tripped over the coal-scuttle and fell into a wash-tub while fumbling around for a match to light the kitchen fire.

(From The New York Journal of Commerce, November 16, 1883.)

The platform announced by the Bronner Clothing Company, corner of Broadway and Houston Street, is short, sharp and decisive: "New firm; increased capital; new energy; square dealing." In order to ascertain if the new firm were really in earnest in their published price lists, a representative of the Journal of Commerce visited their spacious show rooms yesterday, and with list in hand examined both goods and prices. In every case the statements were found to be correct, and this accounts for the great success of the house. The stock of winter clothing comprises all the standard lines of imported and domestic fabrics, and represents only the latest and most fashionable styles. Gentlemen who patronize custom tailors will find it to their profit to inspect the very choice assortment of foreign woolens that are offering in the custom department. First-class workmanship is guaranteed, and prices are from 25 to 30 per cent. lower than those asked by the best tailoring establishments.

Special mention should be accorded to the juvenile department. It covers more space than is usually occupied by large clothing establishments, and presents all the latest novelties for boys and children.

We can say from personal inspection that the statements on the large bulletin boards in front of the store—that a reduction of from 25 to 50 per cent. has been made in each department—are true. We bespeak for the new Bronner Clothing Company the success they so well deserve. It is composed of gentlemen who have a national reputation as manufacturers of clothing, and whose financial responsibility is unquestioned.

We positively claim, and comparison will prove our claim, that values and choice such as we are offering in fine and medium grades of Ready-made Clothing for Winter wear cannot be found in any other house in the city.

to know the cost of fitting up, and the yearly expense of the DAISY KITCHEN, Nos. 44 and 46 East 14th Street, Union Square. Here are the correct figures: Store rent, seven floors, $16,000; music, $4,380; electric light, $4,500; Steamboating and elevators, $3,130; 142 employees, $93,000—total per year, $66,380. Fitting up dining-rooms, parlor, reading and toilet rooms, kitchen, bakery, candy and soda water factory, $80,000. This immense establishment has an average of 7,000 delighted patrons daily. Everything sold on the premises is of the choicest quality and half the usual price. The delicious Java coffee or cream soda, with pure fruit juices, for five cents, is a revelation to many.

An uptown woman just after she had got done her washing, told her talking-across-the-fence neighbor that she was actually so tired that she could scarcely stand on her feet. In fifteen minutes after that she began a two-hour stand on an acquaintance's sidewalk waiting for a funeral to start, and she stood it out.

"How does my wife take my incarceration?" asked a convicted Mormon of a brother. "Susie cries her eyes out; Jennie is sad at times; Martha doesn't seem to care very much; Sophie says she is going back to her parents in Tennessee; while Eugenia is already engaged again." "Ah, my wife is a wonderful woman, isn't she?"

"Transcending the most alluring scenes of 'The Arabian Nights' in splendor, the magnificent system of illuminating is beyond question the crowning attraction of the hour."—Illustrated London News.

WATER FIRE WORKS.

The Staten Island Amusement Company most respectfully announce the opening of their New Summer Evening Resort, at Saint George, Staten Island.

These new and beautiful Grounds are most attractive in point of location; composed of seven acres of greensward on the shore of New York Bay, they are within twenty minutes of the Battery, the terminus of the entire New York Elevated Railroad system, and are reached, every few minutes, by the largest and most comfortable line of steam ferry-boats in the world, at a fare of only ten cents.

The chief feature of the Entertainment to be offered this season will be an Exhibition of the most novel and brilliant Electrical effects, in the shape of fountains of illuminated water.

This elegant device was invented by Colonel Sir Francis Bolton, the eminent English engineer, and has been exhibited with remarkable success in Kensington Gardens, London, during the last three years, having been witnessed by hundreds of thousands of people. Some idea may be formed of the impression produced in London by these Fountains from the extracts from The Illustrated London News. By an expenditure of nearly $40,000, an entirely new series of Fountains have been constructed at Saint George; and, in the judgment of prominent electricians, a more effective and perfect electrical outfit has never before been gathered together. Fountains of water are to ascend into the air one hundred and fifty feet, and being illuminated from the bottom by an aggregation equal to 150,000 candle-power, effects most brilliant and bewildering are produced.

These Fountain effects, which are the most marvellous of modern exhibitions, can be viewed from the Grounds, or from the beautiful Pavilion, which has excited so much admiration, and which has seating capacity for 8,000 persons, all of whom may, at all times, enjoy a vision of beauty in a view down the Bay and through the Narrows. The setting of the Grounds with electrical and other appliances will render them very attractive, aside from the fountain displays.

A still further attraction will be furnished by Open Air Concerts, of the finest music, every evening, by Cappa's 7th Regiment Band.

A special répertoire, for which Mr. Cappa has been making careful preparation, will be provided; and the programmes presented every night will comprise the finest and best music of the day produced under the most favorable circumstances by artists universally known as the best out-door musical organization in the country.

Most ample facilities have been provided in the Pavilion for dining, Ice Cream and other Refreshment, under the care of the PURCELL COMPANY, and with the immediate supervision of Mr. PURCELL and his sons, so well known as high class and reliable caterers.

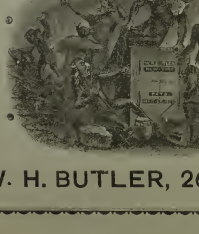
FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF!



W. H. BUTLER, 261 Broadway,

THE METS.

The Mets are on their way home. They have appeared on the ball fields at St. Louis and Louisville, and are now playing a series of games with the Cincinnati Club in that city. The club will next be in Pittsburg and contest four games with the Alleghany Clubs. On Saturday, July 17, the Mets will appear here at Saint George on their home grounds. The dates for the July games are as follows:

Saturday, July	17,	with	ST. LOUIS.
Monday,	19,	"	LOUISVILLE.
Tuesday,	20,	"	ST. LOUIS.
Thursday,	22,	"	LOUISVILLE.
Friday,	23,	"	ST. LOUIS.
Saturday,	24,	"	LOUISVILLE.
Monday,	26,	"	CINCINNATI.
Tuesday,	27,	"	PITTSBURG.
Wednesday,	28,	"	CINCINNATI.
Thursday,	29,	"	PITTSBURG.
Friday,	30,	"	CINCINNATI.
Saturday,	31,	"	PITTSBURG.

The Mets are playing fine ball just now, as indeed are all of the Association nines, and the contest for the championship pennant is an extremely close and exciting one. Each succeeding week the relative positions of nearly all of the clubs are changed, though St. Louis still holds the lead. We may therefore look for a series of most interesting games at Saint George during July.

A MARVELLOUS ELECTRICAL EFFECT

(From Illustrated London News, AUG. 8, 1885.)

"Travelers familiar with the chief holiday haunts of the Continent are unanimous in declaring that the Pleasure Gardens of Europe afford no sight so bewitchingly beautiful as the dazzling spectacle of the illuminated grounds and rainbow fountains of the South Kensington Exhibitions. London has taken so naturally to the open-air concerts held in this lamp-lit pleasaunce, that it 's hardly possible the metropolis will henceforth do without the delightful form of Summer recreation The 'Fairy Land Concert' has become an institution in the Capital, and it would indubitably enhance the sum total of national enjoyment were the fascination to be established in every town in the Kingdom.

* * * * * * *

"Scarcely have the thousands of visitors got over the pleasurable surprise occasioned by the magic illumination when a fresh—and very beautiful—pleasure bursts upon their sight. Still up aloft in his eyrie, Sir Francis Bolton touches a lever, and from 40 powerful towering streams of water, rising with varying height, and from the centre island of the Dutch basin, and in following up by order of the musical scale, the surrounding jets pay their tribute to the grand central fountain and its minor jets. Exclamations of 'Oh!' from the delighted throngs below. The Wizard of Science—sure he has his admiring thousands in his grasp—never lets them relax their attention till his duty is discharged. Sir Francis Bolton plays on his piano with the sun and sparkles of Rubinstein. Dash, dash on two notes, and the lofty central stream changes from silvery hue to a lovely ruby and cerulean blue! A telephonic word of command to the electric light wielder in the tower above the signal box—and a second's shot to the topmost curves of the red and blue jets, and the countless drops fall like brightest bullets—to the rapturous delight of the spectators.—The World.

THE CREATION OF LIGHT.

A most instructive feature in the Exhibition at Saint George will be the opportunity afford d to insp ct the novel machinery required for the production of such vast quantities of artificial light. The Machinery Hall, at the south west corner of the grounds, contains a great variety of Engines, Dynamos, and other appliances in full motion, an inspection of which will in a few minutes, convey more information than hours of reading. But perhaps the most novel part of the visit is the descent by the sub-way, to the strange area below the fountains themselves. The most ample provision has been made for this inspection, and a constant stream of visitors can be accommodated to view a spectacle the like of which has never been seen in this country. Speaking of the visit to the spaces below the London fountains, The London News said:

"A deep descent brings us to the entrance of a long tunnel leading beneath the water basin. He who would find truth at the bottom of the well must traverse this tunnel, at the end of which a marvellous spectacle bursts upon the eye. Glowing pieces of thick glass are let into the roof. A slide of the desired color—red, blue, green, mauve or yellow—is pushed under the glass on receipt of the signal: and an immediately powerful electric light is shot up from below, illuminating the lofty jet of water in the beautiful manner that delights those who and thousands nightly as eloquently testified by the general burst of admiration throughout the grounds.

"From this central point, but below the water, are also worked automatically the illuminated fountains from the subsidiary basins already referred to; and it is really a marvel of ingenuity and careful organization on the part of those who have devised so admirably effective a plan of electric illumination."

St. George's Wonderful Electric Fountain.

The St. George (Staten Island) pleasure grounds were formally opened to the public last night with a full realization of all the marvels and beauties that had been promised. The colored fountain proved to be one of the most brilliantly effective spectacles imaginable. Its hundreds of jets permitted the almost infinite varying of the forms and combinations of its streams, through which shot broad beams of colored lights from beneath. The color changed constantly. At one moment it was crystal, the next roseate, then successively green, blue, purple, gold, and from time to time the tints would blend; harmonize, and contrast with new charms at every change. It had all the splendid brilliancy of fireworks with a softer beauty and grace peculiar to itself, and the vast concourse of spectators applauded with enthusiasm while its display continued. Far out in the bay it could be seen, looking like a gigantic opal, illuminated by its internal fires. The electric lights of the fountain were sixteen in number, of 8,000-candle power each, and twenty-five men, under direction of Mr. L. Stearinger and Mr. William Wynn, were required to work the colored mediums and the jets. This fountain is nearly double the size of any other illuminated fountain in the world, and truly seems one of the glories of fairyland. The Seventh Regiment band gave a concert, and there were fireworks.—N. Y. Sun.

FAIRY LAND ON STATEN ISLAND.

The Staten Island Rapid Transit Company had all it could do last night to carry the throng of people who went down to see the opening concert of the amusement season at St. George. Before the boats reached the landing the line of 100 electric lights were suddenly turned on and the music of Carow's Seventh Regiment Band floated over the water to welcome the excursionists. The pavilion was thrown open and the big grand stand with its 3,000 incandescent lights was all astir. Downstairs the restaurant was presided over by dusky Senegambians who stood at the ends of strange-looking ovens, where oysters in the shell were roasting and bacon, which comes in their steam launches to see the fun. A salute fired by electric bombs opened the entertainment with the "The Star Spangled Banner" by one of Carlo's band and the Seventh Regiment drum corps together. Two more selections followed and then, while the audience were listening to a cornet solo a shaft of light like the most brilliant displays of the aurora borealis suddenly shot up to the zenith. In an instant the entire grounds were illuminated by all the colors of the rainbow, and the electric fountains were at work. From the surface of the little lake at the further end of the enclosure a jet of water rose to the height of a hundred feet, and then on either side a dense column was lifted into the air and fell in a golden shower. Again the variegated colors shot through the spray and the water was thrown into three long jets of yellow, orange and blue. For twenty minutes the column of water was constantly changing, while every color, shade and tint was reflected from the falling drops, at last the mass was broken into a confused combination of a thousand separate streams and one after another the colors of the rainbow were thrown upon it. The whole field seemed lined with electric wires and the ground tunneled with subterranean passages, from which the lights shone with a mysterious and dazzling effect.

The electric plant on the Saint George grounds is one of the largest on the American Continent.

CHICAGO winter horse cars are made two feet wider than those used in summer-time. The addition is to admit overshoes.

The San Francisco Minstrels are now traveling through New York State on their annual Spring tour, and the Opera House is now occupied by the great "Sparks" Company, headed by Willie Edouin, in their great success, "A Bunch of Keys," a satire on hotels. This piece has made a great success wherever presented, and is said to be to hotels what "Dreams" are to photograph galleries. The piece is in three acts, "The Will" being the title of the first act. "The Hotel" the second, and "The Hotel after a storm" the third. It is abounding with fun and absurdities from beginning to end, and the music during the whole performance is of a charming character. Mr. Frank W. Sanger is the manager of this talented company, and is assisted by the courteous Mr. Joseph Arthur, who assumes the position of Business Manager.

Christine Nilsson has presented the pastor of the Lutheran church at Denver with $300. In a section of the country where sages for shedding the light of gospel truth are low, where a clergyman has to go out into the forest and cut his own firewood, where salt pork is at least thirty per cent. higher than it is in New York and Chicago, where an evangelist receives the main part of his salary in damaged garden truck and old copies of religious magazines, such a thoughtful act of charity must be the cause of a great deal of happiness. It will enable the pastor's wife to buy a new sealskin sacque.

The influence of a free press is mighty, particularly in Cincinnati. There the impatient lover no longer expresses his feelings in the flowery verbiage of the poet, but makes his point with the precision and directness of a rifle shot: "Adored Maria, let's consolidate."

"Do you believe that a woman, nowadays, would die for the object of her love?" asked a bachelor friend. "I don't know whether she'd die or not," answered the Benedick, "but I've known her to go wild when the trimming didn't suit her."

Manuel Blazos, commonly called "Old Blazes," is a New Mexican gambler with a portable hell on wheels. This is a car, something like those used by traveling photographers, but is as bright and gay as a circus band-wagon, and is drawn by six handsome horses. The interior contains a faro-table, a roulette wheel, and other fixtures for gaming. Manuel has several assistants, and goes from place to place according to the outlook for profitable business. Thus he is sure to appear at every large fair within two hundred miles of the Mexican border on either side. A new and prosperous mining-camp offers inducements, too, and lately he established himself close to a Texas camp-meeting, with pecuniary profit. He has the reputation of running square games, and his party goes so well armed that they defy robbers.

Now is the time to purchase a Sealskin Sacque. C. C. SHAYNE, the well-known and reliable manufacturer, 103 Prince Street, offers best quality Sealskin, 42 inches long, for $200, reduced from $250; 38 long, $175; 36 long, $150. Dolmans and Paletots greatly reduced. Genuine Hudson's Bay Otter Sacques, $250; Otter Paletots, $350; Otter Dolmans, $450. All goods produced by Mr. SHAYNE are standard styles, thorough reliable, and first-class in every particular.

IMPORTANT.—Mrs. Langtry has been the topic of the day—her name spoken at every fireside; but the little Miss forming the beautiful fountain covered with icicles is of far greater interest to the public, being the only one in the world. The same may be said of Huber's Prospect Oyster and Chop House Ladies' Restaurant, Lunch Rooms, Winter Garden, Concert Hall and Hotel. Table d'Hote, 75c.; with wine, $1.00. The only house in the world of such unlimited accommodations. Philip Leve's celebrated orchestra of soloists every afternoon and evening. 14th to 13th Sts., near 4th Avenue.

WILLIE EDOUIN'S

SPARKS,

FRANK W. SANGER.....MANAGER

IN THEIR GREAT SUCCESS, A BUNCH OF KEYS;

Or, THE HOTEL.

A SATIRE ON HOTELS.

A Musical Comedy in 3 Acts, by Charles Hoyt & Willie Edouin.

An everyday experience.

It is a collection of incidents intended to teach no moral in particular, stirred together by CHAS. H. HOYT, incited, aided and abetted by WILLIE EDOUIN. The piece is called a Comedy, because Comedy is the word used to describe almost everything we put upon the stage at present, and the authors desire to avoid the charge of eccentricity, having enough else to answer for.

The people who risk their lives, limbs and reputation in presenting the piece and the characters they are alleged to assume, may be learned by a careful study of the following table:

INDIVIDUALS IN ACT FIRST.

TEDDY KEYS.....ALICE ATHERTON
A wild Rosebud with accompanying Thorns.

ROSE KEYS.....Miss CARRIE GODFREY
Her eldest sister; also of the Rose variety, but full-blown and rather of the Prim-rose order.

MAY KEYS.....Miss ANNA BREVOOR
Also a sister of Teddy, the third and last of the Bunch of Keys.

DOLLY DOBBS.....Miss MARIETTA NASH
A singular domestic—that is, "she breaks no crockery."

MATILDA JENKINS.....Miss GENIE HOLTZMEYER
Searching for her lost one.

GILLY SPOONER.....Mr. JULIAN MITCHELL
A rural masher, engaged to Rose.

JONAS GRIMES.....Mr. JAMES T. POWERS
A Brakeman who is one of nature's noblemen—this is the author's ideal of a perfect man. Watch him.

TOM HARDING.....Mr. C. B. STEVENS
May's lover.

SAM FOSS.....Mr. HARRY DELORME
Looking for a job—and gets one.

—) AND (—

LITTLETON SNAGGS, Esq.....WILLIE EDOUIN
A legal gentleman, who knows as much of running a hotel as a good many in that business do.

DISGUISES ASSUMED IN ACTS II AND III.

J. FRISK, Sr., a dealer in lightning rods, } .....TOM HARDING
J. ROCKFORD SMITH, a drummer.... }
Col. ST. CLAIR BRAY, a politician, } .....GILLY SPOONER
ROSE KEYS.....
Miss EMMA POUGHKEEPSYE, operatic artiste.....ROSE KEYS
Signorina JERSECITE, operatic artiste.....MAY KEYS
ST. LAWRENCE JENKINS, a drummer.....TEDDY KEYS
PLUG MULDOON, a Mayor.....HARRY DELORME

Flewitt's Elixir of Calasaya Bark, with or without Iron, is said to be invaluable for all diseases of the Stomach, and especially beneficial for Chills and Fever. This preparation is prepared only by Mr. CHARLES FLEWITT, the Sole Proprietor, 433 Sixth Avenue, (late with William B. Riker and Son.)

It is noticeable that Fifth Avenue, between Fourteenth and Twenty-third Streets is now a leading business thoroughfare, and fast becoming the centre of the piano-forte trade of New York City. Already five piano houses are established there, and now the announcement is made that HORACE WATERS & Co. have leased the elegant large store at 124 Fifth Ave., near Eighteenth Street. The location they consider central and convenient for the majority of their customers, and the large ware-rooms are rendered necessary by the increasing demands of their business.—New York Republican.

FASHION NOTES.

From Sunday World.

Already Fashion is beginning to shift her darker garments, and hints of Spring are sometimes seen in the form of light-gray suits. Warm pink-gray cashmeres are made up either with velvet of the same or a darker shade. The Directoire coat, so often seen in these new suits, demands the broad-brimmed felt piled high, with fluffy plumes and knots of ribbon.

"The new spring and summer models designed by Redfern are as effective as anything ever produced by this firm—every style is shown and that lady must be difficult to please who cannot select a costume from the five hundred designs with which they start the season."—Extract.

Fans, or rather the originality of their makers, have relaxed sadly of late The same lace, gauzes and ribbons are used again and again with the fewest variations. Shaded ostrich feathers cannot be called new, but seem to turn the scale in the balance of popularity.

A pink silk gown finished recently for a pretty young woman, just out, was trimmed about the top of the bodice and down a broad side panel of the skirt with curling delicate green ostrich plumes. Long feathers decorated the waist, while short overlapping tips were used upon the skirt.

Redfern has just made a very handsome Directoire coat in a rich quality of brocatelle, arranged at the back with full folds passing down the centre from waist to hem. The sleeves are quite new, with their full surplice plaits from the shoulder—the whole effect is remarkably rich and handsome.

The English mainsocks and wool challis have a soft quality and are delicately tinted, but the new American stamped China silks and cheap challis have failed to catch the well-modulated tones of color, graceful designs and fine texture common to the imported material.

Broad-brimmed, low-crowned hats, worn by young girls and children, are usually ornamented by a single huge bow of stiff ribbon set on the side, far back. The loops are drawn over the crown and twisted about to cover as much as possible, so earning the name of windmills.

Long, pretty feathers of a dark shade, a yard or two of thick ribbon and a good quality of bonnet foll hat can be purchased at a surprisingly low figure. Judiciously combined these three elements will make a charming hat becoming to almost any type of face.

"We were at Redfern's the other day when a large consignment of his new cloths was received and had the privilege of being the first to pronounce an opinion on them—they are exquisite; some of the new shades in the lighter material for summer wear are of the most delicate hue."—Extract.

Alpaca woven with silk and wool comes in any number of shades, and is sometimes stamped with small fine figures. This material is quite as light and fully as durable as the much worn nun's veiling, with no propensity for entrapping every grain of dust, rather shedding it from the glossy surface.

Debutantes who affect tulle need no longer confine themselves to simple white. Wonderful combinations are just now the rage. Pink and blue, blue and yellow, green and white—any two or even three shades that may appeal to the wearer's fancy. These dresses are easily made, consisting of numerous tulle skirts, full and plain. The waist may have either a silk Directoire coat laced lightly up the front over a full tulle vest, or be the simple tight satin and tulle bodice.

Redfern in his new model gowns for this spring is combining silk and cloth in a very happy manner—a Directoire coat of cream broadcloth over a handsomely embroidered skirt of blue-gray corded silk is most artistic.

The fast increasing use of Cocoa as a beverage leads to the introduction of various productions of this delicious breakfast drink, and as the house of HUYLER'S is noted for the excellence and purity of its goods, therefore it is safe to predict that your long Huyler's Cocoa will be a household word. To try a can means to add it regularly to your grocer's order list.

Patent leather has been largely supplanted by the kid and satin shoes. This is hardly a cause for grief, as the constant contraction and expansion of the varnish by heat and cold rendered them disagreeable for constant wear.

In this great age of civilization it is truly barbaric in those who torture themselves, under the delusion that they may please others. Ladies vie with each other to make their waists as small as possible. We would ask them to study "Hercules" and "Venus de Milo." One glance will show that Venus (the ideal of feminine beauty) has a larger waist than "Hercules," the god of strength. The poets of an age of beauty created these great examples of symmetrical harmony, and they will stand forever as symbolical of perfect loveliness. Let the ladies of to day follow their goddess, Venus, and accept the waist which is nature's gift, the beauty of which is guarded by wearing the "Good Sense" corset. To wear them once, is to wear them always.

Good Sense Corsets and Corset Waists are sold at all Dry Goods Houses.

Brocaded silks, bearing old style patterns, are coming rapidly into popularity. Many of these are made in clever imitation of the grandmother's gown long laid by and faded by time, in shades of old rose, lavender, green, blue, &c., decorated in garlands of huge roses or long trailing vines and feather designs, some of the palest tints, others fairly riotig in color.

When a man proclaims his honesty from the housetops, watch him. The exception that proves this rule seems to be the "Fair and Square" ribbons, whose growing popularity and stable quality would appear to warrant the statement: "this label is on the best ribbon made." 5

Every one is shopping just now for Spring goods, such beguiling price checks do the light fabrics display. The American challis, stamped India silks and embroidered muslins that must be sold, are eagerly snapped up by far-seeing mammas and laid by for future consideration.

CANDY AT WHOLESALE.—During next thirty days we shall sell as follows: D. March 25th—Farewell appearance of M. Coquelin.

April 1st—Rose Coghlan in Jocelyn.

April 15th to May 11th—Farewell appearance of Robson & Crane in "The Henrietta."

Speaking of art embroideries, some hand some specimens in curtains, draperies, etc., are on exhibition at the rooms of the SINGER MANUFACTURING CO., No. 34 Union Square. These beautiful goods are illustrations of what can be done on a Singer sewing machine. The company have already furnished nearly nine million, proving the great and general demand for them, yet, with the desire to accommodate and please everybody, especially those who have learned the use of other machines, but prefer to own a "Singer," the company now exhibit machines, newly patented, combining the principles of every other sewing machine in use. Three styles are shown—the Oscillating Shuttle, the Vibrating Shuttle, and the Automatic Tension, these being improvements on everything heretofore made. Since these wonderful yet simple contrivances for all kinds of sewing have been on exhibition, no day's shopping is complete without an inspection of them.

The almost continual publication of articles through the press, bearing on the use of paper cigarettes, and pointing out the injurious effects, has heightened the popularity of "Hall's Between the Acts" all tobacco cigarettes, which are as pure in manufacture as the finest cigar, merely serving the purpose of a short smoke.

This well known brand has stood the test for many years, and never varies in quality.

There are few, if any, firms doing a larger retail trade than SCHMER & CO. of this city. It is almost impossible to call at their warerooms any time of the day without finding some person contracting for a SCHMER PIANO.

THE MAY QUEEN.

The McCaull Opera Company has in preparation an opera which, to a greater extent than any work in the repertoire excepting, perhaps, "Boccaccio," will display the remarkable strength of personnel which distinguishes the organization under Col. McCaull's management. "The May Queen," by A. Cellnitz, is an opera which is peculiarly adapted to the McCaull Opera Company, inasmuch as it will give to each artist of the organization a role eminently suited to his or her capabilities. The libretto is an exceptionably excellent one, not only in the originality of the humorous phases, but by reason of the strongly dramatic story into which the lighter elements are naturally introduced. The scene of the opera is England at a period immediately preceding the Restoration, and the plot deals with the popular efforts to restore the banished Pretender and to overthrow the yoke of the roundheads. The first act opens with a scene representing a square in London; the second plays in a hall in the house of the Lord Mayor, with a second scene in another part of the same mansion; the locale of the third act is an apartment in the Royal Palace of Whitehall: each of these scenes is strikingly picturesque. The story concerns a young Highland laird, Harry Mordaid, and his servant, Toby, who make their first visit to London when the city is in a state of commotion owing to the conspiracy of the King's adherents, chief among whom are Lady Beatrice Hamilton, Nancy, her confidante, and Lord Monbrasse, opposed to the royalists are Lord Middleditch, (the Mayor of London, who is alternately royalist and roundhead, according to his own personal interests,) his two servants, Giles and Stiles, Gen. Lambert and others. The Queen enters London surreptitiously in the guise of the May Queen, and takes part in the plot for the restoration of the exiles. Harry Mordaid arrives in London, and Lady Beatrice recognizes in him an acquisition to the royalist forces. He falls in love with her, and, at a critical moment where the King is in danger, he is prevailed upon to allow himself to be seized by the republicans as the exiled monarch, although by so doing he risks his own life. There are four strong comedy parts, those of Lord Middleditch, Toby, Giles and Stiles. The rôles sustaining the dramatic interest of the opera are all spirited and well drawn characterizations. Cellnitz's music for "The May Queen" is in every respect the finest production of this clever young composer. It is, first of all, melodious and calculated to jingle agreeably upon the public ear; but it is neither trivial nor lacking in originality. The composer has proved himself in this score to possess the faculty of melodic invention in as high a degree as any contemporaneous composer of light opera. His finales are especially stirring, and these, by the way, are accompanied by abundant dramatic action and fine spectacular display. Every principal member of the McCaull Opera Company will have a character of importance in "The May Queen," and Manager McCaull is to produce the work in the most magnificent style, in cost, chorus, orchestra and mise en-scene. Herr Nowak will direct the musical forces, and the stage work will be personally supervised by Mme. Cottrelly.

CAN there be a doubt that Burns and Keats foresaw the issue of their struggle against bigotry, or that Cervantes, in the gloom of his misery, could read the signs of the dawn presaging a sunburst of posthumous fame? Spinoza and Schiller died at the threshold of their goal; Pascal, Harvey, Macaulay, Buckle and Bichat left their inimitable works half finished; Raphael, Mozart and Byron died at the verge of a summit which perhaps no other foot shall ever approach. Who knows how often, since the dawn of modern science, the chill of death has palsied a hand that had all but lifted the veil of Isis' temple? Or in how many thousand lives time alone would have solved all discords into harmonies? An increase of longevity would, indeed, solve the most vexing riddles of existence; it would furnish the peculiar indorsement of Mr. Mallock's conclusion. It would give the vicissitudes of fortune a chance to assert their equalising tendencies it would supply a missing link in the arguments of that natural religion that trusts the equipoise of justice in the apparent caprices of human fate. The price of longevity would redeem the mortgage of our earthly paradise.—Dr. Felix L. Oswald in the August Forum.

GAINES is a pompous little chap who married a daughter of Colonel Cole—richest man in Nashville—and has all the boys laughing at him for eternally bragging of his father-in-law. Gaines, wanting to see Governor Taylor about something one day, marched into his private office, where he was busily writing.

"Good morning, sir," said the governor, looking up. "Take a chair; I'll be through in a moment"—and went on writing.

"But, governor, perhaps you do not know who I am. I am Mr. Gaines.

"Glad to know you Mr. Gaines; take a chair; I will be at leisure in a moment," said the governor, hardly checking his writing.

"But, governor," expostulated Gaines, evidently you do not know that I am Colonel Cole's son-in-law."

The governor glanced up again and said in the same quiet tone: "Ah, Mr. Gaines, take two chairs"—and went on writing.

"DO YOU see those two soldiers coming up the street?" asked a military man to a reporter.

"Yes."

"Those fellows belong to the regular army, and if you will observe me closely I'll give you a good illustration of the force of habit and results of strict discipline. You notice that they keep perfect step and walk erect, as though in the ranks. Now watch them."

When the two soldiers arrived opposite the speaker, he suddenly said in a brisk, sharp tone:

"By the left flank, march!"

In an instant the two men turned to the left, and had taken several steps toward the gutter before they were aware of it. A loud laugh resulted, and the two confused-looking defenders of the nation increased their pace without looking back.

AS THEY DO IT IN BOSTON—Elderly Lady (to platform guard, at Boston and Albany station)—"Which car do I want to take?" Polite Railroad Man—"You will pardon me, madam, for answering your question with another, but the solution of the proposition depends, to a somewhat broad extent, on where you want to go."—Times.

When the children are young and immature it is a great shame and a mistake to prevent all normal development, by encasing them in the stiff, unyielding corset contrivances, which are said to be worn both by the children and their elders. Whether this is true or not, we are not in a position to affirmatively declare, but if so, it is a great pity, and parents ought to show a degree of good sense by sending to Ferris Bros, 341 Broadway, New York, for their patent flexible Good Sense Corset Waists, which are made to fit all ages, and are recommended by physicians.

Crowds can be seen daily flocking around the windows of Mr. Charles L. Ritzman's establishments at 943 Broadway and 171½ 5th avenue, viewing the photographs of the crowned heads of Europe, professional beauties, actors and actresses. This is the finest collections that has ever been seen either in Europe or America.

The latest from the justly celebrated house of HUYLER'S is their Cocoa for the breakfast and supper table, and their Vanilla and family chocolates for eating, drinking, puddings, dessert, etc. These delicious productions are pronounced perfection by the best authorities, being up to the high standard of excellence, for which "HUYLER'S is so widely known.

THE WIDOW DECEIVED HIM.—"Your children all turned out well, I reckon?" said a man, addressing an old acquaintance he had not seen for many years.

"Well, yes, all but Bill, poor feller."

"Drunk licker, I reckon?"

"Oh, no, never drunk no licker, but hain't amounted to nothin'. Bill wuz deceived an' it ruint him."

"Love affair?"

"Yes, an' a mighty bad one."

"She married some other fellow, eh?"

"Oh, no, she married him. She wuz a widder, an' let on that she wuz well off, but she wasn't. Why, she wan't able to get Bill a decent suit o' clothes the week arter they wuz married. Yes, the pore feller has lost confidence."

"I FEAR it can never be, George," said the maiden sadly; "there is an insurmountable obstacle in the way." "I am sure I can remove it, Laura," said George, eagerly. "If you will only let me try" Laura pointed silently to a portrait of her father—a large, cross-eyed man, with red hair, a square jaw, and a foot like a canvas-covered ham; and George took his hat and groped his way out through the hall toward the front door. He wasn't large enough to remove such an obstacle, and he knew it.

WALLACK'S

BOCCACCIO

BY THE

McCAULL OPERA CO.

Extracts from the Press.

The presentation was attended by a large and friendly audience, whose kindly feeling was aroused to positive enthusiasm by performance of more than ordinary merit.—Times.

For years no performance of the kind has gone off with so much dash and brilliancy in all its departments as this. Wuckelly it also stood on a much higher plane than our operatic performances are wont to occupy.—Tribune.

The chorus was large and good looking, and sang with precision and swing; the costumes were new and bright; the entire programme was a credit to even Mme. Cottrelly's management.—Sun.

The cast was great and the opera was put upon the stage in a manner worthy of the highest praise Boccaccio, as given at Wallack's last night, is a rich opera in re-ality. It was sung and humor blended, and blended in an artistic manner by players and comedians.—World

Boccaccio was a success from the word "go," which means from start to finish it was well sung, well acted, brilliantly costumed and won admiration as well as laughter.—Journal.

The audience was large and remarkably demonstrative. There was a great deal of applause, any amount of laughter, and encores in number. The curtain had to be raised several times after the second and the principals, with Herr Nowak, the conductor, and finally Colonel McCaull were called in front.—Herald.

Colonel McCaull has reason to rejoice. Before a packed house at Wallack's last night the presentation of Suppé's charming "Queen of Von Suppe's "Boccaccio" was hailed with acclamation. From the rise of the curtain to the end of the opera the enthusiasm was sustained.—Press.

Boccaccio was thoroughly well cast and it ought to run just as long as its enterprising proprietor may desire.—Evening World.

While Colonel McCaull has given the metropolis many fine productions, his presentation of Boccaccio at Wallack's last evening excelled anything he has yet done. The opera was presented in a perfect manner and there was nothing lacking in the slightest detail.—News.

* * *

The opera will doubtless give pleasure to many people for a long time to come. A great deal of credit is due to Mme. Cottrelly, who personally superintended the production.—Post.

The choruses were all well sung. The costumes were in good taste, often rich.—Telegram.

The cast was one of the strongest ever charged with a presentation of a work of this class in America; the appointments were of the best, and nothing has been spared to make the performance perfect. The audience was kept in a continuous state of eager enjoyment, which at every opportunity broke forth in shouts of laughter and storms of applause.—Commercial Advertiser.

Stripes are more than ever fashionable and most of the gingham are checked-striped. The manufacturers are making a great many cheap parasols of the prettiest cottons, and it will be a fancy of next season to have a parasol of the same material as the rest of the costume. Last year the shops had a few suits of sateen in boxes, consisting of a large pattern for skirts a smaller one for waists and drapery, a parasol of the large pattern goods and fan of the smaller. They cost about $4.75 to $5 and were very popular. This year they will appear again and in much greater variety.

CHAMPAGNE.

Would you have me believe this "Piper" divine,
This glorious, glowing, golden wine
Is only the juice of the grape?
A fruit that springs from earthly soil,
Sown and gathered and pressed with toil,
And simple of line and shape?

It seems to me such wine as this
Is liquid light, an angel's kiss,
Ambrosia from above;
'Tis prisoned laughter, flowing mirth,
A sparkling guerdon to the earth
From Joy, from hope, from love.

Pale sorrow cannot brook its light,
She spreads her sable wings in flight
Before the golden rain;
But, oh! the happy, happy dreams
That gather when the crystal gleams
With generous Champagne!

So while we drink this beauteous wine,
We'll bless the giver, and bless the vine
And God's sweet sunshine, too;
That draws such treasure from the soil,
To cool our thirst and charm our toil,
And make us strong and true.

First production in this city of Duncan B. Harrison's eminently successful Irish drama,

THE PAYMASTER.

The Baltimore Sun, in speaking of this play, says:

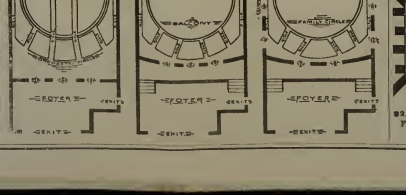
"The house was crowded in every part, and the audience was as enthusiastic and demonstrative as it was large. 'The Paymaster' is an Irish play, full of stirring scenes and exciting incidents, and is enlivened with amusing dialogues and Irish humor. It has a great deal of "go" in it, and is likely to please the popular taste. It greatly pleased the audience last night, and the British Colonel had few friends, especially in the upper gallery. The company is a very fair one, and presents the dramatic story with considerable force and spirit, and those who filled the leading roles were abundantly applauded, and called several times before the curtain. The tank which represents the river is about forty feet long, twenty wide and nine deep, and the Paymaster's first plunge is from a height of about fourteen feet above the water. Mr. Harrison, who was the hero of the play, is a vigorous actor, and his personation, while robust, as the nature of the part requires, is characterized by artistic feeling and power. Miss Beatrice Lieb, who represented Miss Ethel Miley, was just such a heroine as the play required, and the minor roles were in the main very well taken. Many of the audience went to the Opera House last night to see how Mrs. O'Sullivan Dimpfel, of Maryland, would acquit herself in a new and difficult field. Considering the fact that Mrs. Dimpfel has had no previous experience, and that she has been behind the footlights for scarcely more than fourteen nights, she makes a far better showing than might have been expected. She possesses the charms of naturalness and simplicity, which are rarely found in older artists, and which always augur well for the future. She maintains splendidly Maryland's reputation for feminine beauty, and with her lithe, slender, tall figure, chestnut hair, fine complexion and fascinating smile may be depended upon to do great execution upon masculine hearts."

Sale of seats will begin Thursday.



STAR.

The management finds great pleasure in announcing that it has secured for the opening of the regular dramatic season America's great tragedian, Robert Downing, under the management of J. H. Mack. It was at this theatre, in his great creation of Spartacus, that the now renowned young tragedian made his debut in the metropolis, and here he received an ovation the most remarkable in many respects ever accorded any tragic star. The applause and enthusiasm were equal to any ever excited by any tragedian in America. He will appear during this engagement in a repertoire consisting of Spartacus, Virginius and Ingomar, surrounded by an exceptionally strong company, comprising the beautiful and talented Miss Eugenie Blair, Miss Helen Tracey, formerly leading support to John McCullough; Harry Meredith, Chas. Hermann, and other prominent artists formerly in support of Forrest, Fechter, Salvini and McCullough. The realistic and historical scenery has been painted by Voegtlin and Goatcher; the gorgeous costumes by Hawthorne and Eaves.

NORTHWESTERN GALLANTRY.—A French investigator says that women have a larger proportion of brown eyes than men. What the country wants to know is the proportion of women who get up in the morning and build fires.

"MERCY, Bridget! What's the matter with these cakes?"

"I dun know, mum."

"They taste of soap."

"Yis, mum. I couldn't find the soapstone griddle, an' so I soaped the iron one."

MINISTER'S WIFE (to husband): "Will you put up the stove to day, dear?"

Minister (vexatiously): "I suppose I will have to."

Wife: "And don't forget, John, that you are a minister of the gospel."

BIBLICAL.—Two little girls were quarreling the other day over the possession of a doll. Their struggle in time waxed fierce, and their mother attempted to interpose in a gentle, motherly way. "There, there, little girls, you mustn't quarrel like that; what do you read in your Bible?" "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," was the unexpected response of one of the little belligerents. And the struggle went on.

"WHAT is your specialty, my friend?" inquired the visitor of a dime museum freak. "Phenomenal intelligence." "In what direction does it lie?" "I'm the man who always shuts the door."—Harper's Bazar.

"THE HEART OF A WOMAN."

A DOMESTIC NOVEL.

NOTES.

It is said that Mme. Patti has not washed her face for years. She believes that the use of water upon the face brings wrinkles, and uses only cold cream, or what is known as "the bath of Isis," composed of rose-water and glycerine. French women who are enameled never allow water to touch their face, shoulders or arms; they wipe them dry with a towel every morning, and then, with a soft, small sponge rub on an ointment that is prepared for the purpose, rubbing it out again with a square of very fine white flannel. This will keep the enamel intact for about a year, and they preserve what they imagine is beautiful, a skin that looks like pink and white porcelain; but when the dampness of autumn begins, this false bloom begins to show gaping seams and wither away. The owner of it retires into strict privacy for a week—she gives it out that she is ill—and reappears at the end of that time wholly renovated, and, as Mr. Mantalini said of his wife, "as blooming as a rose in a dessolution little flower-pot." Since the rage for amateur theatricals, society women have caught many little hints from professionals in the art of making themselves up. One thing that society caught on to with avidity was grease-paint. They had previously known only two methods of replacing youthful purpureal bloom. One was the old-fashioned rouge saucer, with its red powder that was rubbed upon the cheeks with a bit of cotton, or chamois skin, and the dipping of red ribbon into cologne, using the liquid red thus formed. The objection to the first was the ease with which it was detected. When the face fell obliquely on the skin, the red powder made itself horribly conspicuous, and it was liable to run into streaks in hot weather or disappear utterly in a rainstorm. The ribbon paint was indelible; it could not even be kissed off; but it was difficult to prevent it from going on unevenly and having a hard look, so that when the many virtues of grease-paint were recognized, the women who desired to supplement nature hailed it as a heaven-sent boon. They no longer were called upon to decide as to the relative merits of being dusty or sooty. The grease-paint is about the consistency of vaseline, and is rubbed into the skin with the fingers. The pores take it up, the cheeks can be wiped dry, and after lightly passing the powder-puff over them detection is nearly impossible. Besides which, it is less injurious to the skin than any other sort. Many women use the red paste that comes in manicure cases for tinting the finger-nails, and others make it themselves, using carmine powder, ammonia and cold cream in the preparation.—World.

In a recent magazine article, Olive Logan says:—"On both sides of the ocean there is a wide-spread uprising against the tyrannies of the costume whose exactions have been the main cause of the constitutional disturbances of women of fashion, and necessarily of their offspring, male and female. In London, Hamilton & Co., Regent Street, a great firm of drapers and dressmakers, have taken what is indeed a decided stand; they fit no dresses over corsets! In other words, they make garments for human feminine beings, not for dummies of steel and whalebone. That the hygienic dress idea has expanded vastly of late years is evident, from the rapid success in the business of this admirable firm." The popularity of the "Good Sense Corset Waist" in this country and abroad is another evidence that sensible women are abandoning the use of the old style corset. The Good Sense Waist fits the form properly. They are sold by all the leading retail stores.

Priestley's Silk-warp Mourning Cloth comes in heavy and light weigh's, four grades of each. These materials are particularly adapted, by their cloth like effect, for untrimmed costumes, to be worn in deep mourning with crêpe bonnets and veils, while the invisible silk-warp gives elasticity to the folds, and obviates the objection that lies against all other cloth dresses, of oppressive and unwholesome weight. Silk-warp Camel's Hair Mourning Cloth adds to the mourning cloth the popular camel's hair surface and touch, which adapts it to light mourning, or black costumes worn with colors.

HE INJURES ONLY HIMSELF.

The man who eats six watermelons on a wager is not so brutal as he who throws one piece of rind on the pavement. Mark this.

"Ha, come hither, pretty one, canst tell me why a watermelon is like unto a hook?" It is the voice of the noble Sir Grabland, and, at the sound of his words, the Lady Stiletto, his well-beloved niece, raised her cerulean orbs from the crochet work that lay entangled in her fairy-like fingers.

"Nay, me lord," she answered in her piccolcest tones, "give me an easier one." Like an overflowing river chafing its swollen shores, or a volcano getting ready for a matinee, a great limpid laugh gurgled through the anatomy of Sir Grabland as he replied, "Because, me dear niece, it is never re(s)d until it is opened."

A man running for office may not get out of breath, but he will be more apt to get out of money.

A New York miss at Ocean Grove teaches the art of walking for $1. Habitual drunkards will do well to invest.

"There's always room at the top." But there wouldn't be if everybody who is up there was as big as he thinks himself.

A Chicago doctor has written a book on "The Irregularities of the Teeth." What makes trouble is the irregularity of the tongue.

The egg is regarded with a good deal of suspicion during the hot weather, and the restaurants make many bad brakes on that account.

First Ambitious Citizen—So you think you'll get that nomination yourself, do you?

Second Ambitious Citizen—Well, I am in the hands of my friends, you know.

F. A. C.—No danger of their changing their minds, eh?

S. A. C.—No one will be fool enough to promise them a bigger divvy than I did.

"There's a couple of nice cucumbers, doctor," said the green grocer; "all I've got left. I was going to send 'em over to the Smiths, but if you want 'em you can have 'em."

"No," replied the doctor hastily, "let the Smiths have them; they are patients of mine."

X (from Boston)—How did you like the concert?

Y (from Indiana)—I don't know. The audience wasn't pleased at all, and made the poor musicians repeat everything. Either they didn't like the playing or they didn't think the programme long enough for the money.

First Sweet Child—Oh! Isn't it lovely! How I wish I could have some real old lace too.

Second Sweet Child—Mamma bought this yesterday. It's just common lace like yours.

F. S. C.—Why, I thought it was the same kind those Bonanza children wear.

S. S. C.—No, I just tumbled down in the mud.

Little Girl (to guest at dinner)—Are you English, Mr. Wynne-Pell?

Mr. Wynne-Pell—Yes, my dear. Do you like English people?

Little Girl—Oh, yes. Our servants are all English. Mamma says they are more respectful than Irish servants.

The latest disturbance is usually made by the master of the house trying to open the door at 1 A. M. with a corkscrew.

ANNABELLA'S DOUBLE SHOT.

"Annabella," said a matron to the naughty little girl whose nurse brought her out on the hotel piazza to receive connection, "whatever is the matter? What do you suppose I brought you here for?"

"Don't know," she answered, sulkily. "Don't know?" "No, I don't! You said you must marry off sister Mary this summer, but you didn't say a thing to me." Sister Mary's admirers grinned at mamma's discomfiture; but down they went at Annabella's parting shot. "If you did mean to marry me off, you'd better bring in some other men. I wouldn't marry one of that crowd!"

Agent—Can I sell you some fly paper this morning?

Woman—No, I guess not.

A.—It's first-class stock.

W.—I don't believe I want any.

A.—Are you fond of music?

W.—Oh, yes, we all like music in the house.

A.—Madame, this fly paper contains all the latest operas, and when the captured flies sing together the effect is just too grand for anything.

Wife—You have, then, the complete list of guests to be invited to the reception?

Friend—Yes, I don't think we have missed anyone.

Wife—Be sure and see that my husband gets an invitation. I'm sure he'd never forgive me if I overlooked him.

Old Gentleman (at a sewing class)—I suppose, Miss Arabella, young ladies are not interested in the question, "What shall be done with the surplus?"

Miss Arabella—Oh, yes, we are indeed. We intend to surprise the Rev. Mr. Whitechoker with one, and it is going to be lovely.

THE FIRST BANJO PLAYER.

The first man who ever played a banjo was Joe Sweeney, and his instrument was an excavated gourd with four strings. Joe gave his first tunes in public in a circus tent. He was a deck hand, working on a canal going from Richmond to Lynchburg. He afterwards was with negro minstrel companies, and was a great feature both in this country and Europe.

BROUGHT TO JAIL BY A BLUNDER.

"How is it I find you in prison, my man?"

"It was a mistake, sir, that brought me here—Indeed, I might say a blunder."

"How so?"

"I only stole $1,000 when I could just as easily have taken $50,000.

SHRINKAGE ON ONE SIDE ONLY.

Customer—There isn't a hundred pounds of ice in that lump, I'm quite sure.

Iceman—Well, you see, mum, the shrinkage counts for something in this weather, and ice is a very slippery article.

Customer—Yes, but I see the weather doesn't affect your bill; there's no shrinkage in that.

COMMENTS OF THE NEW YORK PRESS ON VON SUPPE'S GREATEST SUCCESS,

"BELLMAN."

"Bellman" was produced last night at Wallack's before a crowded house, which greeted it with great applause, and started it well on a career of unbounded success. —Sun.

The music of "Bellman" is charming, its story has a romantic interest, and its scenes are laid in a land whose picturesque costumes are quite novel to our stage.—Herald.

There is no better piece of concerted music in the whole field of operetta than the finale of the second act, and it is worthy of the composer, who stands at the head of German comic opera writers.—Times.

The music challenges smiles where it buoys up the comedy, touches a tender chord when the story with which it is associated enters the region of sentiment, and there is always the insinuating rhythm of the dance with the inspiriting pulsations of the march.—Tribune.

Colonel McCaull may he congratulated on having an excellent company of artists capable of giving the opera artistic interpretation.—World

The mounting of the opera was excellent, especially from the point of view of scenery, which was most elaborate and all new.—Journal.

Mr. Hopper's topical song was especially successful and was brought to a close only when the actor's lungs and not the appetite of the audience gave out.—Star.

It is a delightful work, full of charming melodies and is worthy of the composer of "Fatinitza" and "Boccaccio."—Telegram.

The new operetta has so much that it is entertaining and attractive to commend it to public favor that its success is assured. —Mail and Express.

No doubts were left in the minds of the audience as to the success of the opera. It is destined to enjoy a long season of prosperity.—Commercial Advertiser.

The amount of comedy alone in "Bellman" will make it a success.—News.

Encores were numerous, and laughter at the comedy lines was hearty and frequent.—Evening Sun.

The costumes and stage settings were elaborate and artistic in detail. It is not difficult to predict for the new opera a popular success in New York as marked as that which it originally achieved in Vienna.—Graphic.

THE WINE OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

The best known wine in this country is "Piper-Heidsieck." The agents have never been particularly solicitous about purchasing the right to call themselves Purveyors to this or that Royal or Imperial House or family in Europe, nor have they tried either directly or indirectly to make people believe that "Piper-Heidsieck" was a favorite of any particular class of people in foreign countries; because they have always cherished the thought that the American people had opinions and tastes of their own, and that wine-merchants could use their time and money to the best advantage by importing for their fellow-citizens the best possible wine at the smallest possible profit.

Being convinced now, that the majority of connoisseurs are beginning to ask for a dryer wine, they have determined to conform to their taste, and will, after this date, import a somewhat dryer wine, but of the same high quality that has kept the approval of the great mass of American Champagne drinkers since 1835. In future, the brand will be known, therefore, as "Piper-Heidsieck, Sec."

The Agents will not advance the price until they are absolutely compelled to do so, although, as is well known in the wine-trade, sparkling wines of inferior quality are selling at from five to seven dollars a case higher than "Piper-Heidsieck."

Trusting that this honest effort to furnish the American public with a wine dry enough to meet the taste of the day, and of the very highest quality, at a price as low as it can be made consistent with a modest notion of a reasonable return for the capital employed, they sign themselves,

Very respectfully,
JOHN OSBORN, SON & CO.

A Brooklyn man has secured a patent on a machine to manufacture plumbers' traps. It is not stated what he intends to do with the plumbers caught in his traps.

A lady who had her photograph taken was showing it to her husband. "Do you think it looks like me?" she asked. "Yes," he said after a critical examination, "it looks like you, only it seems quiet."

Husband (impatiently, to his wife)—I told you I only wanted half a cup of tea, and as usual you've filled it up to the top. Don't you know what half full is? Mother-in-law (grimly)—She ought to know by this time.

"Hello!" exclaimed a giddy little comet, disporting itself in the milky way. "Who are you, anyhow? I don't believe I've seen you in these parts before."

"No," returned the stranger, "this is my first appearance here. I'm the top plume of a lady's theatre hat. The hat's just below here a little way."

"What's your business?" asked one merchant of another.

"I manufacture quinine; and yours?"

"Specific for ague."

"Shake!"

Wife of a rich rural Californian at her first grand dinner.

The colonel offers his arm—I am to have the pleasure of taking you out to dinner, Mrs. A.

Rich rural wife—Go 'long with you; my husband is here; take your own wife out.

Mrs. Jellyboy—Where on earth have you been? Mr. J.—I cannot tell a lie. I've been at m'office. Mrs. J.—That's where we differ. I can tell a lie—when I hear one. (Cruel silence during which something is heard to drop.)

A sentimental writer asks: "Did you ever watch a dear baby walking in the morning?" Many times. It generally occurs about 5 o'clock, and enables the father to get up a splendid appetite for breakfast.

Old Gentleman (to driver of Third Avenue street car)—My friend, what do you do with your wages every week—put part of it in the Savings Bank?

Driver—No sir. After payin' the butcher an' grocer an' rent, I pack away what's left in barrels. I'm 'fraid of them savin's banks.

PRIESTLEY'S FEATHER CLOTH, a little lighter than Clairette, in its soft-lying folds, justifies its name. With its distinctive armure surface it is equally suited for combination with satin, and for the esthetic style of dress. What more beautiful we do not know, and suspect no one is much wiser than ourselves, but the Feather Cloth comes nearer our idea of it than any other modern drapery.

Redfern's new spring tweeds are the nicest things in dress materials I have seen for a long time. Some of these are woven into large check designs, but they are put together in such a way that however loud the check may look in the piece, in the dress it is very aggressive and always good style. Collars still continue as high as the length of the wearer's neck will permit. Colours in tweed for spring dresses will be gay, fawn, old rose, which means the tint of a withered pink rose petal, green in various nouances, and one for those who care to be extra daring. Fawn-coloured tweed, with a huge check in faint red lines, makes a deliciously pretty and stylish spring dress.

The waists of dresses for young women are almost all made with the effect of a crossed fichu front and the leg-o'-mutton sleeves. Basques are but little worn by young girls.

A Letter [Mrs. James Brown Potter.]

TUXEDO CLUB, TUXEDO PARK, N. Y., Oct. 29.

DEAR MADAM:—I am using a pot of RECAMIER CREAM you so kindly sent me, and find it all you claim it to be. It will be one of my articles of toilet from this time forth. I consider it a luxury and necessity to every woman, young or old. With renewed thanks for introducing me to your delightful RECAMIER CREAM, I am, Yours truly, CORA URQUHART POTTER.

MRS. JAMES BROWN POTTER TO MME. H. H. AYER.

RECAMIER CREAM and RECAMIER BALM are, as Mrs. Potter says, necessities to the toilet of every lady, young or old. These preparations are positively made from a recipe used for so many years by the beautiful Mme. de Recamier. Mrs. AYER bought this formula from a descendant of Mme. de Recamier and it is now manufactured for sale for the first time, guaranteed, if used according to directions, to remove all blotches, redness and imperfections of the skin, rendering it soft, fresh and beautiful. If your druggist does not keep the RECAMIER preparations, he or you can obtain them from the proprietor and manufacturer, HARLEY HUBBARD AYER, 37 Union Square, New York City.

PRIESTLEY'S WHITE SILK-WARP FABRICS

Are of the same materials as the Henriettas, and put up in the same way. Four distinct fabrics, Chantrette, Feather, Crevenet and Crepon, in two grades, show respectively Canvas, Crape, Armure and Plain weaves, and come in shades adapted for wear in or out of mourning. They will be found to furnish a variety in warmth, style and price, to suit all temperatures and occasions, and all styles of making and trimming. They are for sale by all the principal dealers in the large cities, and in New York City by Lord & Taylor, Stern Bros., Jas. McCreery & Co., Jackson's Mourning Store, H. Altman & Co., Simpson, Crawford & Simpson, Le Boutillier Bros., B. O'Neill & Co., H. C. P. Koch & Co., James A. Hearn & Son, and others.

FASHION NOTES.

White undressed kid mousquetaire gloves are worn by brides and bridesmaids, sometimes the latter wear tan, but of much lighter shades than formerly.

Redfern has introduced this season a new Riding Trouser for ladies, made from the softest spun silk to match the habit, and it is fashioned somewhat after the style of the ordinary sage tight, but made to be worn over stockings.

Maiden-hair ferns of beautifully shaded green tints and green moiré sashes of great width are on pretty artificial rose dresses, and to complete them are capote bonnets of the lace, with green velvet around the face, and a high cluster of ferns for trimming.

For the new season dresses of silk and cashmere are being revived. They promise to be popular, because they can be worn as house dresses all the year round in this climate. The skirts are of heavy silk, untrimmed, the draping and basque of cashmere, the latter with a silk vest.

Miss Stager, an American girl, who recently married Lord Arthur Butler of the 1st Life Guards, gave an order to Redfern for fourteen dresses as a part of her wedding trousseaux, all of which had to be finished within ten days.

The great naturalist, Cuvier, was walking one day with a young lady, who was a victim of tight lacing, in a public park in Paris. A lovely blossom upon an elegant plant drew from her a cry of rapture and admiration. Looking at her pale, thin face, he said: "You were like this flower once; to-morrow it will be as you are now." Next day he led her to the same spot, and the beautiful flower was dying. She asked the cause. "This plant," replied Cuvier, "is an image of yourself. I will show what is the matter with it." He pointed to a cord tightly bound about the stem, and said: "You are fading away exactly in the same manner under the compression of your corset, and you are losing by degrees all your youthful charms, just because you have not the courage to resist this dangerous fashion."

The protection of GOOD SENSE Corsets and Corset Waists by Perris Bros., serves to remedy this great evil, and the injurious practice of deforming the figure is fast dying out. Perris Bros.' goods are for sale at all first-class houses.

McCAULL OPERA COMPANY.

Monday evening, May 9, Colonel McCaull will inaugurate his third season of opera comique at Wallack's, by a reproduction of Carl Millocker's military opera, "The Black Hussar"—(Der Feldprediger), which met with decided success during its former presentation here, drawing large audiences for one hundred and four performances in the summer season.

For the coming production an exceptionally strong company has been engaged, including many local favorites, among whom are, Matilde Cottrelly, De Wolf Hopper and Edwin Hoff, of the original cast, together with Marion Manola, Celie Ellis, Josie Knapp, Hubert Wilke, J. De. Angelis, Carl Irving and other well-known artists. The chorus, which is always a feature in the McCaull productions, will be large, carefully selected, and the music, under the skillful guidance of Signor De Novellis, will be rendered with the same vigor and precision that has marked all the performances of this organization. The story of "The Black Hussar" is well known, dealing with the trials and tribulations of the burly Burgomaster, the comicalities of his ubiquitous servant Piffkow, the healthy orphan Barbara, and the love adventures of the Black Hussar, and his lieutenant with the Burgomaster's two pretty daughters, interspersed with many thrilling war scenes, funny situations, and bright and taking music, not forgetting the ever popular "Read the Answer in the Stars," which has been justly considered as one of the best topical songs of the day, and for which several new local verses have been written.

During the season Colonel McCaull will give the original production in English of several European successes of the most popular of the foreign composers, for which arrangements have already been made, it being the intention to make the coming operatic engagement as popular as possible, with meritorious works, correctly cast and handsomely mounted.

"And do you doubt my love?" he asked, passionately.

"No, George," she answered, with admirable poise, "but when you say that the day you call me your's will usher in an era of lifelong devotion and tender solicitude, you—pardon me, dear—you put it on a trifle too thick. You seem to forget, George, that I am a widow."

THE WINE OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

The best known wine in this country is "Piper-Heidsieck." The agents have never been particularly solicitous about purchasing the right to call themselves Purveyors to this or that Royal or Imperial House or family in Europe, nor have they tried either directly or indirectly to make people believe that "Piper-Heidsieck" was a favorite of any particular class of people in foreign countries; because they have always cherished the thought that the American people had opinions and tastes of their own, and that wine-merchants could use their time and money to the best advantage by importing for their fellow-citizens the best possible wine at the smallest possible profit.

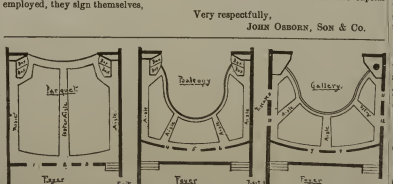
Being convinced now, that the majority of connoisseurs are beginning to ask for a dryer wine, they have determined to conform to their taste, and will, after this date, import a somewhat dryer wine, but of the same high quality that has kept the approval of the great mass of American Champagne drinkers since 1825. In future, the brand will be known, therefore, as "Piper-Heidsieck, Sec."

The Agents will not advance the price until they are absolutely compelled to do so, although, as is well known in the wine-trade, sparkling wines of inferior quality are selling at from five to seven dollars a case higher than "Piper-Heidsieck."

Trusting that this honest effort to furnish the American public with a wine dry enough to meet the taste of the day, and of the very highest quality, at a price as low as it can be made consistent with a modest notion of a reasonable return for the capital employed, they sign themselves,

Very respectfully,

JOHN OSBORN, SON & Co.



MR. WALLACK'S COMPANY TO CHANGE QUARTERS TEMPORARILY.

Amid the various rumors of novel combinations and partnerships with which the theatrical atmosphere is just now filled, perhaps not the least interesting is explained in the following correspondence:

13 WEST 30TH ST., NEW YORK, April 28, 1887.

DEAR MR. DALY: As Col. McCaull will occupy my theatre in May, and as I wish to bring out another play after the third month, "The Romance of a Poor Young Man," I write to ask, as you close after this week, if you will give that "Poor Young Man" the shelter of your beautiful house for a couple of weeks, commencing on May 16.

If you entertain the idea, and I know you will oblige me, if you can, we will meet this week and talk over the necessary arrangements.

Yours always truly,
LESTER WALLACK.

DALY'S THEATRE, NEW YORK, April 27, 1887.

MY DEAR MR. WALLACK: I will be very glad to give the shelter of my house to your very charming "Poor Young Man," which I recollect with pleasure as one of the very brightest successes of Wallack's Theatre—under whose roof I drank in my earliest draughts of refreshing comedy. I had intended giving my theatre into the hands of painters and carpenters next week after closing my own season, but I can readily defer their work for a few weeks and be prepared to receive your company in "The Romance of a Poor Young Man," or any of your other comedies which it may suit you to give in the time which I gladly place at your disposal, beginning May 16.

Be kind enough to name the day and hour we shall meet to arrange the details, and believe me, very sincerely, AUGUSTIN DALY.

By this harmonious arrangement between the two managers, Mr. Wallack will take his entire company to Daly's Theatre on the 16th of May, and, after opening in "The Romance," will very probably produce one or two of the choicest comedies of the repertoire of Wallack's Theatre, as the wind-up of his season.

A very notable production of Octave Feuillet's beautiful comedy drama, "The Romance of a Poor Young Man," is to take place at Daly's Theatre on May 16, with the entire strength of the Wallack Company, Mr. Wallack and Mr. Daly having joined hands in an endeavor to employ all the resources of both their establishments to make this production as complete and picturesque a one as can be conceived of. Here, for the first time, will be seen the united experience and taste of Mr. Wallack, with the artistic finish and beauty of stage appointments that distinguish all Mr. Daly's work. The scenic artists of both establishments have been engaged for some time upon the scenery, which will be of elaborate variety, and the cast is to be most notable—including all the celebrated members of the company, Mr. Kyrle Bellew appearing for the first time the part in which the late H. J. Montague earned so much popularity some eight or ten years since.

At any rate it will be very interesting to observe the results of a combination between two managers, who it may generally be conceded, have no superiors in this country—and perhaps in no other—in their particular lines of work. It is also a pleasant thing that so much cordiality should exist between them.

These two weeks' performances of "The Romance of a Poor Young Man" will end the Wallack season, and the existence of the company in its present form, as there will be many changes in it next year.

Jane Eyre,

in which she has never been excelled. Miss Thompson has acted the part many times, and her beautiful impersonation of the heroine is well known and could not be in better hands. In the prologue, with her hair in braid and wearing short dresses, Miss Thompson looks to be no more than fifteen years of age. Later in the play she realizes the woman's part with great power and effect. Her reputation as an emotional actress is fully established, and in all the large cities where she has appeared, the press and public are unanimous in saying that she is truly a great actress. "Jane Eyre" is full of strong emotional scenes and a proper amount of comedy, and will be given with a specially selected company and appropriate scenery and costumes.

FOUND A DRAMATIC GEM.

MR. WALLACK'S NEW PLAY BY HENRY GUY CARLETON, THE AUTHOR OF "MEMON."

The plot of this play is both interesting and exciting. An American girl has been married to a young Frenchman. They love each other devotedly. The wife, however, remarks so singular that her husband will not take her out anywhere. She is also loved in the French fashion by a certain Count de Vahis (a misnomer, by the way, as Vahis is a dukedom and a royal title of the younger sons of the House of Bourbon). Upon one occasion when the Count sees the husband, whose name is Favart, he recognizes in him a man who has escaped from the galleys, having been condemned for an attempted murder in a railway carriage. In his anxiety to gain the affections of the wife the Count denounces Favart as the escaped jail bird. This is the end of the first act, and the detectives arrest Favart.

In the second act a number of subsidiary characters begin to assume prominence. There is in particular a young American of the languid swell order in Paris who has a habit of knowing people he meets by the aid of a diary he has kept for years. A pocketbook has been found by the wife, who insists it is part of the diary he always carried about with him. Incidentally, the man upon whom the attempt at murder was made has left the asylum where he has been confined for some years, and also recognizes Favart as the man who travelled with him in the compartment of the railway carriage where the murderous attack took place. But he was sleeping when it took place and can merely aver that Favart was the only man in the carriage. The escaped convict is allowed to remain in his house the night of the arrest, and there is a powerful scene between the husband and wife. Much as she loves him, she cannot help feeling convinced that he is guilty. This pains him more than all. He protests to her his innocence, but when she will not believe, he endeavors to make no apparent effort at escape, knowing that the house is surrounded and that he will be shot if he attempts it. The wife divines his object and prevents his accomplishing it.

The next morning Favart is about to be led to his prison once more. All chances of vindication appears to be cut off, when by the merest chance the wife gives the young American swell the pocketbook which she believes is the diary he has lost. He denies the ownership at first and then suddenly recollects the fact he had picked up this identical pocketbook in a railway carriage when traveling from Monaco to Paris. It was the very train upon which the crime last occurred that forms the basis of the piece. The Count enters, sees the pocketbook and claims it as his. This refreshes the American's memory again to the fact that the Count was the man who was his traveling companion on that night. The dramatic persons are all assembled when the Count claims the pocketbook. The American says he will deliver it up on the Count swearing that it is his. He goes to swear when Percy Watkins, the man who was nearly murdered, comes forward and says: "No, that pocketbook is mine. It was the one stolen from me on the night of that journey." In an instant the mystery is explained and the innocence of Favart is made apparent.

The Count is the man who had followed the assaulted man from Monaco, where the latter had won a large sum of money, who had entered his compartment while he was asleep and who had first tried to kill him and then rob him. The Count is the real criminal, and Favart, whose real name is Gustave Duprez, is at once seen to be innocent. On the arrest of the Count the curtain falls.

The language of the play is so good, says Mr. Wallack, that he will not alter a line. The entire action of the play takes place between eight o'clock at night and eight in the morning, and the interest never flags. There are several characters in the play who have a good deal to do with it, who are not named here because the story can be told well enough without them. They, in some portions, supply a comedy interest to the piece.—From the Morning Journal.

LAWRENCE BARRETT,

The Distinguished Tragedian, will begin a six weeks' engagement at the

STAR THEATRE,

January 5th, 1885, appearing in several of his most popular impersonations, supported by a superb dramatic company.

An eminent astronomer says: "It would take ten years to photograph the heavens." Judging by the time it takes for a man to get his photograph finished upon earth, we should think it would.

True other day an old sun burned farmer was asleep in the cars, with his head thrown back and his hat drawn over his eyes. The conductor, who happened to be near-sighted, came along and saw the red ear, and thought it was the man's ticket stuck in his hat. So, not wishing to awaken the dreaming agriculturist, he bent softly down and drove a hole through that bucolic ear with his punch. In an instant the farmer let off a screech that caused the engineer to stop the train under the impression that something serious had happened. There he attempted to mail the conductor, who thereupon put him off the train for disturbing the peace.

The moral of this little fable teaches us that if we have ears that look like railroad tickets, we should keep them where they cannot be punched, and that we should do our sleeping at home, and not in the cars. It also teaches us that, if we are railroad conductors, we should not be courteous and punch tickets without dittoring passengers, but should rudely wake them up with a slap on the back every time.

E. A. Morrison, 880 Broadway, between 19th and 20th Streets, takes pleasure in announcing that extensive alterations have been made in his building with a view to add to the convenience and comfort of his customers. The Infants' Furnishing, Millinery and Ladies' Cap Departments are now on the second floor, which has been elegantly fitted up, and affords a degree privacy not heretofore attained. The first, or store floor, is much more roomy than formerly, on which are offered the goods in Dress Trimmings, Laces, Velvets, Made-up Goods, Ribbons and Notions. The Wholesale Departments are on the third and fourth floors. A new Otis elevator has also been added.

A special feature at the new Annex Banquet Hall of the "Hoffman House," is the excellent and comfortable arrangements for theatre and dinner parties. From 6 to 8, and 10 to 12 p.m., the Hoffman House Orchestra interprets a popular programme.

The "Bijou" Grand (only five feet in length) is the latest addition to the styles of Pianos manufactured by the well-known house of Schmer & Co.

This is certainly the smallest Grand Piano ever made, and creates a genuine furore among musicians on account of its immense power of tone and the really sweet quality it possesses. It will not fail to meet with large sales.

The fashionable prejudice of paying for a first-class piano double its intrinsic value has been destroyed by the Hardman Pianos, which are faultless, and can be bought at a reasonable and modest price. The new Hardman Upright is the same of modern piano manufacturing. New Warerooms, 146 Fifth Avenue, above 19th St.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

From the "Domestic Monthly."

Little girls have coats of striped woolen goods, opening over a Molière of Surah silk; the plaited skirt is of woolen material, the shade of the Molière.

Steel-gray brocade and gros grain silk with poppy red velvet collar, cuffs, revers and straps across the Molière, with steel buckles for additional trimming, will be a stylish combination for the autumn.

The most stylish buttons are those with jet or steel effects.

Belts of velvet ribbon sewed in the side seams, have pointed ends with a button and buttonhole, and are crossed in the centre of the front just below the waist line.

Shopping bags of finely braided straw or wicker work have plush end pieces, kid lining, and nickel finishings.

Jetted laces have a long pendeloup from the centre of the large flower designs, as the lilies, roses, fuschias, etc.

The hems of handsomely trimmed drawers have lengthwise buttonholes worked every inch, and satin ribbon run through that is tied in a short bow on the outside.

Corset covers and other lingerie trimmed with lace, have very narrow poppy-red ribbon velvet run in the insertion and tied in short double bows.

One of the handsomest designs seen in passementerie represents a large jetted crescent, with a flat hollow ball of finely cut beads resting in the curve.

Pillow shams of Renaissance or Richelieu lace, have a band of velvet ribbon set around the centre containing the monogram, with the lace sewed plainly on the outer edge.

THAT REMINDS ME.

The best bus—kissing a pretty girl. Best re-bus—kissing her a second time. A terrible blunderbuss—kissing the wrong girl.

A young physician, asking permission of a lass to kiss her, she replied, "No, sir; I never like a doctor's bill stuck in my face."

Law is like a sieve, you may see through it, but you must be considerably reduced before you can get through it.

Lawyers are lucky. They can do lots of courting and not be engaged.

Don't marry su attorney; it must be a sad thing to be hung to a limb of the law.

A witness in a case of assault and battery, when asked what he said, replied, "I said to him with the toe of my boot, 'Go home!'"

An Irish crier, being ordered to clear the court, did so by this announcement: "Now, then, all ye blackguards that isn't lawyers must lave the court."

"I never was ruined but twice," said a wit, "once when I lost a law suit and once when I gained one."

A judge asked a man how old he was. "I am eight and fourscore." "And why not fourscore and eight?" "Because I was eight before I was fourscore."

Said an Irish justice to an obstreperous prisoner on trial: "We want nothing but silence, and hut little of that."

A coroner's jury returned a verdict that the death of a child was "the visitation of God to take it out of misery."

JANE EYRE.

A poet, speaking of the moon, said: "She hid her cheek upon a cloud, like beauty on a young man's bosom."

"Hello there! how do you sell wood?" "By the cord." "How long has it been cut?" "Four feet." "I mean how long has it been since you cut it?" "No longer than it is now."

"Ladies and gentlemen, I'm not selling these goods; I'm giving them away." "Then," said a wag, coolly, "I'll thank you to hand me that silver tea-pot you have in your hand."

An indulgent father urged his son to rise. "Remember," said he, "that the early bird catches the worm." "What do I care for worms," growled the youth, "mother won't let me go fishin'."

A little boy asked his father if dogs had wings, giving as a reason for his inquiry a newspaper item which stated that a dog flew at a man and bit him.

A county magistrate, being called on to marry a couple, said—"I pronounce you man and wife, and may God have mercy upon your souls. Amen."

MODJESKA

In MAURICE BARRYMORE'S New Play.

Mr. Barrymore's play of "Nadjezda," produced on Monday night at the Star Theatre, is noteworthy for the courage and the skill that it exhibits. Courage first, for that is the quality which, of all that are absolutely essential to good work anywhere, is most seldom seen in the handicraft of the current playwright. Mr. Barrymore had an idea, a distinct and worthy one—an advantage to in itself sufficiently rare to entitle him to serious consideration—and he worked it out on lines that were not bent or modified by any consideration of what box-office taste or Pecksniffian purism would say * * *

Instead of resorting to ideal or mythical personages and rolling them grandiosely on in blank verse, he took the men and women of actual life and undertook to show in the colloquial prose of the day that the tragic elements of human existence lie about us as plentiful and as poignant as ever if we have the eyes to see them * * *

Barrymore has said clearly, boldly and unmistakably what he meant to say.

Now, observe how bold it is. Nadjezda's husband in his play is engaged in the uprising of 1863. He is captured by the Russian Government, and the Russian Gen. Zobouroff, who has long been an admirer of Nadjezda, now thinks he has the wife in his power. He sends her a letter. It is a most remarkable document.

"For years" he says, "I have been at your feet. Now your are at mine. But I will be magnanimous. Give me one hour of your society and I will send your condemned husband back to you."

To save her husband the wife consents. Her husband is returned a corpse * * * This is at least a bold conception that requires vital treatment and judicious handling.

That is just exactly what it receives.

The moment we get the prologue of this play before us we understand that something is going on.

There is the heroine, frozen with horror and astonishment, before the dead body of the man she loves. The great wrong in all its cruelty usurps all her faculties. She calls her little girl and, dedicating her to the work of vengeance, dies. This is the prologue.

It means something, evidently. There are no gaps to the observer's interest that are to be filled with yawns * * *

The play now moves on with the daughter arrived at womanhood and wearing on a gentle nature this abeyant mission of vengeance. The man to whom her mother has committed her is her paternal guardian, but he has fallen into the snare of the cruel and sensual Zabouroff, and that heartless villain proposes to the guardian that the girl shall go to his chalet as his mistress. This proposition is unreservedly made in the play in direct terms. The girl is now in love with a young Englishman, a fine type of the brave, reckless and frank British boy, who has been inveigled into the secret order of Nihilists. It is to save this young man that she is forced to take a compromising step. Her self-sacrificing impulses are an inheritance. And then, when, in spite of all her caution, she finds herself entrapped by Zabouroff, and he about to play upon her the same treachery that killed her mother, she turns on him and stabs him.

This is the current of the story * * * The trend of the whole work is tragic. Its legend is intensely human. Its tale of perfidy, ignominy, sin, hatred and death is integral, germinant, climateric. Its strife of passions moves on as in life until the "shadows of the pale repose" come with the only possible denouement.

CANDIES PACKED AND SHIPPED TO ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTRY

The manufacturers of "Cloth of Gold," Straight Mesh, intend them to be the "Ne Plus Ultra" of Cigarettes. Already the demand signifies success.

The finest collection that has ever been seen on the continent is at RITZMANN'S, 943 Broadway.

An amusing story is told of an unsubbable reporter from Washington, who crossed the Atlantic purposely to "interview" the Poet-Laureate. Mr. Tennyson in some way heard of the threatened invasion of his lares et penates, and ensconced himself more obstinately than ever behind his thickset walls of stone and hedge. But he reckoned without his host; for one Sunday morning, after a whole week's waiting and watching near the poet's stronghold, the enterprising Washingtonian cornered the Poet-Laurcate on his way back from Whippingham Church, where the Queen also goes. "Good morning, Mr. Tennyson. I've come all the way from the States to report an interview with you on things in general." "Excuse me, sir, I have not the honor of knowing you, and must decline being what you call 'interviewed,' either by you or any other reporter," replied the poet. "It's all the same to me whether you do or not," struck in the American; "I'll write out an interview and get paid for it just the same"—which he did.

Crowds can be seen daily flocking around the windows of MR RITZMANN'S establishment viewing the photographs of the crowned heads of Europe, professional beauties, actors and actresses.

It is a fashionable fancy in Paris to have dessert-wines slipped into satin cache-bouteilles, the corks of which are heads with hair dressed in the fashion of the country whence the wine is produced. Alicante is in a pink satin bottle, and the cork or stopper is a Spanish girl with high comb. Port wine is in a garnet of ruby satin, with an Oporto beauty for its stopper, and she holds a fan in her hand. Pajarete wine is in a sulphur-colored bottle of satin, with a bull-fighter cork, etc.

MR. RITZMANN of 943 Broadway, has on exhibition and for sale, photographs of all the celebrated actors and actresses of London, Paris and New York

HASCH!—A certain economical hotel keeper writes his own bill of fare, thereby saving the cost of printing. One of his latest announced, "Coffey, supe, roste befe, fride hamm, boyled and bakt pertaters, mutting chops, veele culverts, hasch, and crucified chickens."

A small boy defined salt as "the stuff that makes potatoes taste nasty when you don't put it on." He was probably twin brother to the boy who said that pins had saved a great number of lives by not being swallowed

Messrs. Moet & Chandon own 1517 acres of the most renowned vineyards in the Champagne districts in France, and keep constantly on hand in their cellars from ten to twelve million bottles of wine. The superficial area of their cellars is 109,509 square yards. The yearly shipments of Moet & Chandon Champagnes are larger, by several hundred thousand bottles, than those of any other establishment in the trade. In England alone the yearly consumption of Moet & Chandon's Champagne averages 120,000 cases.—Knickerbocker.

Many Mothers are unable to nurse their children. In such cases the best substitute to be found is MELLIN'S Food, prepared on Liebig's formula, which has proved physiological to correspond with mother's milk. Sold everywhere by druggists.

IT WAS ALL RIGHT.—Several persons were making purchases in a grocery in Kansas City on a snowy day, when an old man, with a cane in one hand and a bundle in the other, entered and asked, "Did any of you drive up here in a sleigh?" "Yes, I did," replied one. "Was it an old white hoss?" "Yes." "And an old woman in the cutter?" "Yes." "And can she manage the hoss?" "I guess she can." "Then it's all right," said the man of the cane and bundle. "The old hoss has run away, and the old woman is hanging to the dash-board and shouting 'Murder!' with all her might; but, if she can manage him, there's no use of anybody getting excited over it. Let me inquire what the price of cranberries is to-day."

ASK YOUR GROCER FOR

Aside from the merit of conception in the story there is a special excellence in the superincumbent air of destiny that is part of the local color The wrongs of the insurgents are pictured rather than narrated and are felt rather than understood. But deeper and subtler than this even is the subtone of despair that is associated with the whole scheme of vengeance Entirely unlike the Russian plays that have preceded it, and especially unlike that notable one by Oscar Wilde, Nihilism here betrays its own wretchedness while it is professing to be an instrument of freedom.

I regard this as one of the most remarkable achievements of the drama. and I cannot recall in recent plays anything so elementally awful as the articulate wail of despair wrung from the heart of Nadine in the last act. when she takes one retrospective view of her fruitless life and her whole woman's nature breaks out in the protest.

"Hate—hate; nothing but hate!"

Against the Stygian background of infernal passions the playwright has protected his pure, artless and sensitive girl, and as a fit companion introduces the young Englishman. Anything more boldly and cleanly contrasted than the sinuous and sensuous Zaboroff, with his devilish self-possession and keen cruel leniency of power, and the ingenuous, honest English lad, who seems to bring the smell of the hedgerows with him, I have not lately seen. * * *

The burden of the acting falls upon Mme. Modjeska, who plays both mother and daughter. Her great power lies in subtle action and that kind of expression which outleaps speech. In pure declamatory passages her voice tells against her, and her accent robs English eloquence of its suavity and ring. But Modjeska is one of those great artists who do not always depend upon speech, and even when she does she supplements it with a finesse of gesture and a meaning of attitude and carriage, and she so loads it with tonal expression beyond all articulation that one always apprehends her meaning even when he does not comprehend it.

She has a tremendous gamut of emotions to run in this play. Grief that is as sudden as lightning and as deadly; horror that her freezes her woman's nature; a love that is unselfish, pure and indestructible; a fear that permits her no rest and that hangs over her like a cloud: terror, hatred, revenge, remorse, and at last the frost of an awful sadness that settles upon the heart when all is gone.

This is no child's work. By the side of it the emotional materials of "Fedora" are single stringed.

I should like to tell as nearly as I can how Modjeska does it all. But for the present it is enough to have touched upon the salient merits of the play itself. Some other time I may follow her step by step through this drama, and even attempt do some justice to the clever young man who accompanys her, and who, if he has not made a new path for her, has certainly opened one for himself.

A young man should always want to see himself as others see him; and doing so he will find that his ears never seem so big as they do in spring time, after he has had his hair cut for warm weather.

A lady stood patiently before the receiving-teller's window in a bank the other day, but no one took any notice of her until she attracted the attention of the money-taker by tapping with her parasol on the glass. "Why don't you pay attention to me?" she asked petulantly. "I am sorry, ma'am; but we don't pay anything here. Next window, please," was the polite response.

NOT MARRIED, BUT HIS WIFE WAS.—"Are you married?" asked the Judge of a man who had been arrested for vagrancy.

"No, I am not married, but my wife is."

"No trifling with the Court."

"Heaven save us! I'm not trifling with the Court. I was married, but got a divorce. My wife got married again, but I didn't; so I am not married but my wife is."

"Do you know," said a Fort Lincoln man to the young lady who was driving while out sleigh-riding, "that in the east the other day two young people were out just as we are, and the sleigh upset, and that little accident was the cause of a wedding within a week." The ...ignation latter they were floundering in the snow, but the girl says it was an accident.

As a rule, ladies know when they get a bargain. Since C. C. SHAYNE, Wholesale Fur Manufacturer, commenced selling Seal-skin Sacques, Dolmans, Paletots, Fur and Silk lined Wraps at retail at lowest cash wholesale prices, the salesroom, 108 Prince Street, has been crowded with ladies taking advantage of this splendid opportunity to purchase direct from a reliable well-known manufacturer, thereby saving the profits made by retailers. $25 can be saved on a Sealskin Sacque, $50 on a Seal Dolaman, and $5 to $25 on Silk or Fur lined Wraps. Shayne has the reputation of manufacturing the most stylish and elegant furs in New York. Every fur garment is made from choice skins, selected with care, thoroughly deodorized, properly cured and dressed, and warranted. Mr. Shane has the patronage of the elite of the metropolis.

It is a mistaken idea, that Champagne Wine, to be good, must foam. The common vines in Champagne produce a highly foaming Wine, whilst the fine Champagne Wines, made from the best vines, foam very little, and sparkle only in the glass.

This is particularly noticeable in the fine Wines shipped to this country by the old house of Moet & Chandon, whose world-wide reputation is a guarantee that no finer and purer wine could be had.—Knickerbocker.

ORIENTAL.

Who, When the silent wrinkle steals
On brow and cheek, its ravage heals,
And e'en the freckle's stain conceals?
Who but Gourand.

His ORIENTAL CREAM leaves not
On Beauty's skin the faintest spot,
But drives away the pimple spot,
Gouraud (T. Felix),

Who gives back the charm to beauty's cheek,
When time or sickness make them weak,
"'Tis Oriental Cream,' the ladies speak,
From my Gouraud's.

It rather disgusted a Vermont man who went to a neighbor's barn to steal a cow to find when he got the animal home that it was his own cow, which his neighbor had stolen earlier in the night. He says the neighbor is a confounded thief.

"He that is discontented in one place," says a sage philosopher, "will seldom be happy in another," if we should see this wise man up to his neck in a horsepond we should consider it a piece of unjustified interference to help him out.

Waiter, "the cat's ol sah, you are spoiling your lunch."

Guest, "in what way?"

"Wnater, why sah, you jiust took your nupkin and rubbed the quail on toast off your plate."

Guest, "so I did. How stupid of me! I thought it was a fly-speck.

"Talk about pitchers with curves," remarks an eminent base-ballist, "there's no curve like that of the little brown jug."

A weary child upon being told by her mother to implore the Deity for his daily bread before retiring, replied that it was safer to go to bed on an empty stomach he would postpone the supplication 'til morning

A certain humorist having applied for a situation, told the managing editor he was the author of a joke about the banana peel. Whereupon the managing editor hired him to write personal reminiscences of the antediluvian period.

Who was the first whistler? The wind What tune did he whistle? "Over the hills and far away."

What would we do without poets? The latest piece of information in verse begins, "The golden rod is yellow." How horrible it would have been had the public been obliged to remain under the hallucination that the golden rod was scarlet.

ARNHEIM'S

So noted for honorable, square dealing, and giving best trimmed and stylish fitting Garments at such low prices, have thus gained a reputation worthy of merit. Our intention is to have all purchasers thoroughly satisfied or money cheerfully refunded.

This season our display is really immense; 800 pieces of the most attractive styles in the finest qualities for Suitings, Trousers and Overcoatings, and only adapted for fine, first-class tailoring.

These Goods, to be made to order, first-class trimmed, in suits, $16 upward, and trousers $4 upward. Overcoatings to order $12 upward, and will give a Kersey, Melton, fine Beaver or Chinchilla Overcoat, lined with silk or satin throughout, for $25; general price elsewhere, $30 to $40.

Why it is most essential in having your garments made to order: You see what you are buying on both sides and a chance to test every part. There are many pure wool-face goods and all cotton backs which, if made up easily pass for all wool. The same in trimmings, in silks and satins. It is necessary to see the back, as many are cotton when they would pass for genuine, until wearing, if manufactured. But with us we show up all ins and outs, and pride ourselves on all goods bearing the closest inspection.

"Sweet Bouquet" Cigarettes afford a dainty whiff for connoisseurs.

A collector of a gas company presented a bill for payment the other day, and was met with the response: "Are you sure this bill is right? I must have burned more gas than that." The collector turned white with fear and hastily making his way down stairs told a policeman that a maniac was up in the third story, and something had better be done about it right away.

A great deal has been said and written about imitation diamonds, but few people know how perfect a substitute has been discovered and little dream that the brilliant stones they see worn and admired so much, are not genuine, but South African Quartz Diamonds, the only satisfactory substitute for real diamonds, the resemblance being so perfect as to deceive experience judges. The cost is the smallest consideration, as ten dollars will purchase a pair of Quartz Diamond earrings in a gold mounting that will equal in size and brilliancy a genuine diamond worth seventy-five dollars. As a holiday present nothing could be more acceptable than those beautiful gems, which can be had only at the agency, 727 Broadway, opposite Messrs. Harrigan & Hart's Theatre. Quartz Diamonds should not be confounded with the poor imitation sold elsewhere.

"Any good shooting on your farm?" asked a hunter of a farmer, "splendid," replied the agriculturist, "there's a dry-well man down in the clover-meadow, a cloth peddler in the house, a candidate out in the barn, and two tramps down in the stock yard. In England the custom for the winner to give wine to a club is not uncommon, especially in the days of race dinners, but in this country it is a rarity. It was, however, inaugurated at the Fall Meeting of the Louisville Jockey Club, by the house of Moet & Chandon. All those connected with the turf should not forget that for some years past these gentlemen have been liberal patrons of the American turf. The Moet & Chandon Wines are the best, purest and cheapest Champagnes imported in the United States, and no sportsman should be without them.—KNICKERBOCKER.

"Not to have been to the Children's Carnival and Ball, Academy of Music, Feb. 7th, will be to miss one of the great social events of the season."—Graphic.

WALLACK'S.

"The School for Scandal" is one of the most popular as it is one of the best English standard comedies, and its revival never fails to awaken a keen and lively interest. It is closely allied with the fortunes of this house where its presentation has ever been signally successful both in an artistic and financial sense. Outside of Wallack's, "The School for Scandal" is seldom seen, and for reasons that must readily suggest themselves. It is not within the capacity of all actors to surmount the difficulties that must be overcome in a natural and graceful impersonation of the character of Sir Peter Teazle, and there are many light comedians unequal to the task of Charles Surface, while the parts of Lady Teazle and Mrs. Candour require the most judicious treatment in order to be effective. Since the play was last presented at this theatre—some two years since—four gentlemen prominent in its then cast are now missing, three being removed from the scene of their earthly lives, while the fourth one (Mr. Chas. Coghlan), is now playing an engagement in London. The void occasioned by the ruthless hand of death has been admirably filled, and in the person of Mr. Osmond Tearle, is found a most able exponent of the character of Charles Surface. Mr. John Gilbert is seen in his time-honored part of Sir Peter Teazle, and Miss Rose Coghlan and Madame Ponisi respectively enact the characters of Lady Teazle and Mrs. Candour with consummate tact and ability. Mr. W. Elton appears as Moses, Mr. Harry Edwards as Sir Oliver Surface, Mr. Gerald Eyre as Joseph Surface, Mr. Allaur Rogers as Sir Benjamin Backbite and Mr. D. Leyson as Crabtree. The representations of "The School for Scandal" are necessarily limited, as other plays are now ready for production.

"The Children's Carnival and Ball may be said to be under the especial patronage of that very fastidious old dowager Good Society. She is always present and brings with her a host of relations in laces and diamonds, and with all the flutter and ceremony of a gorgeous retinue."—Express.

Various novelties are in course of preparation at Wallack's, and one or more are ready for immediate production, but are deferred in consequence of the signal success attending the present old comedy revival.

AT THE SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS.

At the San Francisco Minstrel's Opera House, the tragedy of "Othello" continues to attract large crowds of interested spectators, the impersonation of the Moore of Venice by Signor Chas. Salvini Backus, is one of the finest efforts of that gentleman, and serves to keep the house in roars of laughter. This is principally the effect caused by the representation of "Othello," but, Mr. Backus is nothing if not original, and his burlesque upon the dusky hero brings down the house, and this is all that any of the great masters of the art ever accomplished or ever expect to accomplish. In a word Backus as Othello is simply immense. The hit at the Minstrel's is replete with a variety of acts and sketches, all of them laughable and fun-provoking, some few of which are here enumerated, but the mention of all would encroach upon our somewhat limited space. Mr. Harry Kennedy, the great ventriloquist; Johnson and Powers, the renowned terpsichorean artists; Prof. Harry M. Parker, and his wonderful Mastodon Dog Circus, and Mr. Harry Hickmond in his famous specialties are part and parcel of the excellent features nightly presented. The performance which is the best of its kind in the United States, concludes with a humorous sketch, entitled "A Hot Night in the City."

Mme. Demorest's Monthly Magazine continues to maintain its well earned position on account of the superiority of its Fashion Intelligence, the beauty and usefulness of its illustrations, and the general excellence of its reading matter.

BALL NOTICES.

On the evening of Feb. 3d the Annual Charity Ball in aid of the Nursery and Child's Hospital will take place at the Academy of Music. On this evening, as on previous occasions, a large gathering of the elite of New York's society will certainly be present. There is always an atmosphere of respectability attending the annual reunions in the cause of charity that are not so observable in other similar affairs, and the names of the ladies and gentlemen patronizing the ball are prominent in the highest circles of society. General Grant and lady will attend the Charity Ball this year.

The Fourteenth Annual Ball of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, N. Y. Lodge No. 1, will take place at the Academy of Music on Monday evening, Feb. 13th. Nearly all the distinguished lights of the dramatic profession have signified their intention of attending this year's ball. The proceeds of the affair will be used in ministering to the wants of the sick, infirm, and disabled among its members; and with this worthy and benevolent object in view, the committee of management have secured the generous impulses of members of the profession and the public generally.

"Where's the Cat?" is the somewhat singular title of a comedy shortly to be produced at Wallack's, and which is said to abound in novel situations and mirth-exciting incidents. The play is meeting with great favor in London, and its merits are unquestionable.

"The early part of the Children's Carnival and Ball fête consists of a series of tableaux, illustrations of historical incidents, floral impersonations and allegorical dances, in which the parts are allotted to graceful and cultivated children."—Express.

Another epoch in the phenomenal run of "Hazel Kirke" at the Madison Square Theatre, and this time an important one, viz.: the anniversary performance of the piece, February 4th is the date, and a souvenir of unusual value, even for the Madison Square, is to be given away on the occasion. A medal plaque, manufactured by the Gorham Company, with appropriate design and of exquisite workmanship, will be a souvenir of real and lasting value, and one hitherto unknown in the history of the stage.

Among the features of the London season, so far as it has progressed, the comedy of "The Upper Crust" stands out quite prominently. The piece is playing at Toole's Folly Theatre, and the house is crowded at each representation. "The Upper Crust" will be seen at Wallack's in the course of a few weeks.

"THE ORTHOEPIST."

Among the recent publications of Messrs. D. Appleton & Co., is a manuel by Mr. Alfred Ayres, one of our local elocutionists, entitled "Orthoepist," which we discover, by consulting Noah Webster, means one skilled in correct pronunciation. The book is certainly very handsomely gotten up—red edge, illuminated title-page, and so on—and looks as though it might contain something we do not know, and possibly would like to know. On this point, however, we will not venture an opinion, until we shall have seen more of it than its outside, which is so taking that it will, doubtless, find favor with many buyers of books for holiday presents.

The Monroe House, so it is now called, and which until recently was known as the Union Place Hotel, is one of the most conveniently located establishments of its kind in this city. Under the auspices of its present proprietor (Mr. James M. Morton) it has been completely rehabilitated, and affords to guests—either transient or permanent—an exceedingly comfortable and homelike sojourning place. From its close contiguity to the principal amusement resorts, it offers peculiar advantages to theatre-goers, and with the general public its easy accessibility by innumerable cars, stages and elevated railroads is a desideratum not to be overlooked. The service and cuisine of the Monroe House are A 1, and under the management of Mr. Morton, who is an experienced and capable caterer, it will doubtless rapidly secure to it the liberal patronage it has already enjoyed.

JUDGMENT ON THE CAT.

This is the ruling on a famous Indian case in the moot court of a law school: Four men brought several bales of cotton. That the rats might not destroy the cotton, they purchased a cat. It was agreed that each of the four should own a particular leg of the cat, and each adorned with beans, &c., the particular leg apportioned to him. The cat accidentally injured one of its legs, and the owner of that member wound a rag around it, soaked in oil. The cat, going too near the hearth, set the rag on fire, and being in great pain rushed in among the cotton bales, where she was accustomed to hunt rats, and set fire to the cotton and rags, which were consumed. The three owners of the unburnt legs brought a suit against the others to recover the value of the goods destroyed. The defendant denied his liability, and claimed to recover damages against the plaintiffs. The Court said: The leg that had the oiled rag on it was hurt; the cat could not use that leg; in fact, it held up that leg and ran with the other three legs. The three unhurt legs, therefore, carried the fire to the cotton and alone are culpable. The injured leg is not to be blamed. The three parties who owned the three legs with which the cat ran to the cotton will pay the whole value of the bales to the partner who was proprietor of the injured leg.

"Novel" Definitions.

"Which Will She Choose?"—The one who has the most money, of course.

"The Toilers of the C"—All the tenors who are trying to cultivate the si de posi-trine.

"From Thistles—Grapes?"—Oh, no, certainly not—Watermelons.

"The Wandering Heir"—The one in the butter.

THE STAGE.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

Black fur is not effective as a trimming for brown cloth.

Guipure lace is coming very slowly, but surely, into fashion.

A new use for the fine wool Jersey cloth is to make open mantles.

The newest muff- in London are made of a piece of the dress.

Muffs of feathers are rather pretty, but why spoil them with tiny bows?

Bows on your dress skirt, if you like, but they must have six loops and two ends.

An Englishwoman's ideal five-o'clock tea-cloth is made of white bordered damask cloth.

The most elaborate trains do not measure more than from seventy to seventy-five inches.

Pearl trimming nearly half a yard wide goes well with mauve brocade, and costs only $40 a yard.

The ball dresses seen so far this season look as if the patterns were exhumed from ancient fashion books.

Fashion in Paris is raving over old jewelry, especially in silver; the blacker and more tarnished, the better.

Chinchilla fur, frail though it be, is extremely becoming to blondes, and is the first choice for very young ladies.

It is a mark of the extremest of refined taste that natural flowers are now more used than artificial, especially by ladies at home.

A thin woman should wear fluffy hair, for the closely-dressed style sow so often seen exaggerates the leanness of lean ladies.

Some very original dresses have been imported in which a yellow green-like bronze is the prevailing color of the satin brocade.

The most fashionable opera cloaks in Paris at present are chenille capes, reaching only to or just below the waist, with hoods attached.

White violets made of satin are the choicest garlands worn upon London toilettes just at present, although Parisians use poke-berries of black with golden stems and tendrils.

Novel scarfpins represent diminutive oysters and lobsters, miniature pewspapers, letter envelopes, and pearl bootjacks inlaid with mock rubies.

Silk stockings now come in colors which match the dresses worn by children to balls and parties. In scarlet these are plain, except for a delicate vine-pattern extending far up on the ankle. A few have striped sectional figures, and a few are half black and half red, or half light and half dark blue as far as the knee. Dots as large as a pea are also embroidered in a contrasting color on plain ground; stripes are varied by having embroidery on every alternate stripe. Canary-color is fashionable for children's hosiery just now, and the material in raw or dressed silk.

Round hats in the English styles seem to be the most popular. The stylish half turbans with closely-rolled brims were found to be so becoming during the last season that they are retained for winter wear, and are trimmed with ostrich bands, peacocks' breasts, white gulls' breasts, shading into gray, short wings, lmperial heads, tropical birds, and also long ostrich plumes, curled over the crown of the hat. Another favorite style of hats is the Beaumanais of black long-nap beaver, large and broadbrimmed, and trimmed with an immense bow of plush set in the middle of the crown, and run through its folds with a tuning fork of Roman gold.

The prelate cape, which is a part of the pilgrim's suit, is now seen in fur, the remainder of the costume being trimmed with a corresponding kind. A cap in correspondence is often a stylish addition, and a complete costume is provided with a small muff.

A jacket much admired abroad is so much covered with narrow black braid in shirrings at the wrist and elbow. The Chinese and Japanese sleeves described in previous articles remain in favor while some effect of change is given to ordinary coat-sleeves by the divided Directoire cuff, the military corded cuff, and a shirred cuff set above a wrist-ruffle.

A luxurious novelty of fashion, which a literary gentleman might possibly assume, is an imported gown of a costly Oriental stuff filled into the neck-band somewhat in medieval cloak form. Slippers to accompany show beading, as well as gold-thread embroidery, and the sealing-cap is of velvet embroidered in an Oriental pattern and finished without a tassel, or with one fastened down. Smoking-caps are now worn back on the head like a Persian fez.

A Watteau robe or tea-gown, recently designed, is of pale yellow pink-satin combined with yellow organdie and trimmed with coffee-colored Languedoc lace. Loops and knots of fire-colored satin ribbon are added, and the indispensable hood, which is of Languedoc lace, shows a large black velvet butterfly embroidered with gold, and poised upon the tip. Another, similar, is placed upon one side of the waist bow of yellow-white mull and Languedoc lace, which finishes the costume at the neck.—Domestic Monthly.

Extracts from a Bundle of Papers by Paul Siegvolk.

The capitous spirit also, often betrays its possessor into gross errors of judgment; besides destroying amiability of character. Should one look narrowly or curiously into the motives of a good action. If she deed be worthy may we not praise it and be content? When we begin to speculate concerning motives, we wander in a boundless sea, often without soundings, star or compass; and whore not seldom every time the current is treacherous. A thousand causes, of which we are unconscious, may warp our judgment; and one may easily condemn a fellow being, whom the searcher of all hearts would acquit:

"What a deep we partly may compute.
But know not what's resisted."

If superior sagacity and wisdom enables us to see the faults of our familiar friends, or superior virtue acquit us of similar failings, may we not better exercise those stronger powers of mind and heart in self-restrial, so as to avoid a reflection on the weakness, rather than so as to humiliate our weaker brother. Social intercourse is the wine of life; and possibly we may thus contrive to avoid disturbing the lees, while we joyfully drain the cup.

From thinking of one's self simply as disconnected with society, a man's mind is unhinged, and his views of life become wholly erroneous.

THE STAGE.

That Reminds Me.

The way for a lad boy to go on a bender is over his mother's knee.

An Oil City man traded off his gun for a dog, because he wanted to "get something to boot."

Chimney Sweep is the name of a trotting horse. It is said that at his last race he fairly flue.

An old bachelor will shriek for a better half when a counterfeit fifty-cent piece is shoved off on him.

Little Johnny says: "Talk about patent base-burning stoves! Why, my mother's slipper is a hot enough base burner for me."

A young lady being asked by a rich bachelor, "If not yourself, who would you rather be?" replied, sweetly and modestly, "Yours truly."

A fellow who married a poor girl said he married her to take care of her, but now when he staid out late at night she took hair of him.

"I don't mean to reflect on you," said one man to another. "No," was the reply, "you are not polished enough to reflect on any one."

A man writes to an editor for $4 "because he is so terribly short," and gets in reply the heartless response, "Do as I do; stand up on a chair."

Square umbrellas have been introduced in Paris, but some one says they are just as bad as the old kind, because they are never round when wanted.

The only time a girl doesn't see every other fellow on the street is when she has just got a letter from her own fellow and is reading it as she goes along.

Sarcasm (to Irish laborer): "Here la some beer, Pat, if you care to have it; but I'm afraid it's quite dead." Pat: "Oh, dead, is it? Sure, then, darlint, it's I'm the boy to bury it."

It's about an even thing between a man and an orange peel. Sometimes the man throws the orange peel into the gutter, and sometimes the orange peel throws the man into the gutter.

"When you play that sonata," said a teacher to his pupil, "you must show off your fingering as much as possible." "Don't you fear about that," she responded; "I'll have a finger-ring on every finger."

"My friend, how far is it to the next town?" asked the pedestrian. "Only about a little ways," was the evasive reply. "Well, is , four, six, eight, or ten miles?" was, I think it is," was the answer.

A mother noticing her little daughter wipe her mouth with her dress sleeve, asked what her handkerchief was for. Said the little one: It's to shake at the ladies in the street; that's what papa does with his.

"Kind words never die." How bitterly does a man realize that terrible truth when he sees all the kindest words he ever used in his life staring at him from his published letters in a breach of promise suit.

A few years since at the celebration of our national anniversary, a poor poffer who was present, being called upon for a toast, offered the following: "Here's health to poverty; it sticks to a man when all his friends forsake him."

A conceited young country parson, walking home from church with one of the ladies of his congregation, said, in allusion to his rustic audience, "This morning I preached to a congregation of asses!" "I thought of that," observed the lady, "when you called them your 'beloved brethren!'"

"Give me the hand that will never deceive me," said a young Cleveland sprig in the presence of some young ladies the other evening. A young lady who had heard of the young man's propensity for the gaming table, dryly remarked, "I guess a straight flush is about the kind of a hand you want."

A little boy having heard a missionary tell how the natives of South Africa live, on going home said: "Ma, I wish I was a little South African boy." "Why, Georgie!" exclaimed the mother, "what over put such an idea into your head?" "'Cause their mothers don't wear slippers," said little George.

An Irishman, who had a pig in his possession, was observed to adopt the constant practice of filling it to repletion one day and starving it the next. On being asked his reason for doing so, he replied, "Och, sure and isn't it that I like to have bacon with a strake o' fat and a strake o' lane aqually, one after t'other?"

The young milkman and his girl stood before the justice of the peace. "You take this milk—ahem!—this man for butter or for worse!" the mighty man of the law enquired. The girl said it never a curd to her before, but she supposed she would if that was the only whey.

A lady, whose cook went to a wake, was given notice by her a fortnight afterwards that she was going to be married. "Who to?" asked the mistress. "Plase man, to the husband of the corpse." Why, does he love you?" was the next question. "Oh, yes, ma'am; he said I was the light of the funeral."

"Why, Franky," exclaimed a mother who was taking dinner at a neighbor's, "I never knew you to ask for a second piece of pie at home!" "'Cause I knew 'twant no use," mumbled Franky, as he crammed his mouth with the "second piece."

A gentleman hails a carriage and bids the driver convey him to the other extremity of the city. "I say, boss," says the jarvy in his most coaxing tones, "it's a long way, and up hill, and the horses is tired—would mind going somewhere nearer hore?

Lately a gentleman sat down to write a deed, and began with "Know one woman, by these presents." "You are wrong," said a bystander, "it ought to be 'know all men.'" "Very well," answered the author, "if one woman knows it, all men will, of course."

Just before visiting the menagerie, Johnny had a passage-at-arms with the young aunt who assisted at his toilet, and with whom he flew into a rage. Arrived at the menagerie, Johnny was immensely interested in a strange foreign animal with a long, lithe body. "What animal is that, mamma?" he asked. "It is called an ant-eater," my son. After a long silence—"Mamma, can't we bring Aunt Mary here some day?"

Said a Galveston school teacher: "If I have ten apples and give you five and your big brother five, what will be left?" "I'll be left," responded the younger brother, "for he will eat away with all of them. That's the kind of a presidential candidate he is."

When a Boston man invites you to dinner, and heads a postscript N. B., he means "no beans."

It was a young housekeeper who sot the cake she had baked for a surprise party out of doors one cold night to be frosted.

Many a book agent and canvasser has discovered that the "welcome" on a doormat refers to the third house around the corner.

A medical writer asks: "Does position affect sleep?" Well, rather; if you're hung up by your trousers on a spiked fence, you won't sleep very soundly.

An exchange says the Egyptian obelisk cannot stand our climate. It will have to. It is asking a little too much of the people to change their climate to suit the obelisk.

WALLACK'S.

"The School for Scandal" is one of the most popular as it is one of the best English standard comedies, and its revival never fails to awaken a keen and lively interest. It is closely allied with the fortunes of this house where its presentation has ever been signally successful both in an artistic and financial sense. Outside of Wallack's, "The School for Scandal" is seldom seen, and for reasons that must readily suggest themselves. It is not within the capacity of all actors to surmount the difficulties that must be overcome in a natural and graceful impersonation of the character of Sir Peter Teazle, and there are many light comedians unequal to the task of Charles Surface, while the parts of Lady Teazle and Mrs. Candour require the most judicious treatment in order to be effective. Since the play was last presented at this theatre—some two years since—four gentlemen prominent in it then cast are now missing, three having removed from the scene of their earthly lives, while the fourth one (Mr. Chas. Coghlan,) is now playing an engagement in London. The void occasioned by the absence of so much talent is satisfactorily filled, and in the person of Mr. Osmond Tearle, is found a most able exponent of the character of Charles Surface. Mr. Dan Gilbert's rendering of the humorous part of Sir Peter Teazle, and Miss Rose Coghlan and Madame Ponisi respectively, enact the characters of Lady Teazle and Mrs. Candour with consummate tact and ability. Mr. W. Elton appears as Moses, Mr. Harry Edwards as Sir Oliver Surface, Mr. Gerald Eyre as Joseph Surface, Mr. Albert Rogers as Sir Benjamin Backbite, and Mr. D. Leeson as Crabtree. The representations of "The School for Scandal" are well-worthy of it, and another play are now ready for production.

"The Children's Carnival and Ball may be said to be under the especial patronage of that very fastidious old dowager Good Society. She is always present and bringing with her a host of relations and near affinities, and with all the flutter and ceremony of a gorgeous matinée.—Express

Various novelties are in course of preparation at Wallack's, and one or more are ready for immediate production, but are deferred in consequence of the signal success attending the present old comedy revival.

SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS.

At the San Francisco Minstrel's Opera House, the tragedy of "Othello" continues to attract large crowds of interested spectators. The impersonation of the Moore of Venice by Signor Chas. Salvini Backus, is one of the finest efforts of that celebrated actor, and serves to call forth peals in roars of laughter. This is not generally the effect caused by the representation of "Othello," but, Mr. Backus in speaking of not only the play, and his interpretation of the dusky hero brings down the house, and this is all that any of the great masters of the art ever accomplished or ever expect to accomplish. In a word Backus as Othello is simply immense. The bill at the Minstrel's is replete with a variety of acts and sketches, all of them laughable and fun-provoking, some few of which are here enumerated, but the mention of all would onerously upon our somewhat limited space. Mr. Harry Kennedy, the great ventriloquist; Johnson and Powers, the renowned terpsichorean artists; Prof. Harry M. Parker, and his wonderful Mastodon Dog Circus, and Mr. Harry Richmond in his famous specialties are part and parcel of the excellent features slightly presented. The performance which is the feat of its kind in the United States, concludes with a humorous sketch, entitled "A Hot Night in the City."

Mme. Demorest's Monthly Magazine continues to maintain its well earned position on account of the superiority of its Fashion intelligence, the beauty and usefulness of its illustrations, and the general excellence of its reading matter.

BALL NOTICES.

On the evening of Feb. 3d the Annua Charity Ball in aid of the Nursery and Child's Hospital will take place at the Academy of Music. On this evening, as ever occurring in the highest circles of society. The Fourteenth Annual Ball of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, N. Y. Lodge No. 1, will take place at the Academy of Music on Monday evening, Feb. 14th. Nearly all the distinguished lights of the dramatic profession have signified their intention of attending this year's ball. The proceeds of the affair will be used in ministering to the wants of the sick, infirm, and disabled among its members; and with this worthy and benevolent object in view, the committee of management appeal to the generous impulses of members of the profession and the public generally.

"Where's the Cat?" is the somewhat singular title of a comedy shortly to be produced at Wallack's, and which is said to abound in novel situations and mirth-exciting incidents. The play is meeting with great favor in London, and its merits are unquestionable.

"The early part of the Children's Carnival and Fall fete consists of a series of tableaux, illustrations of historical and mythological impersonations and allegorical dances, in which the parts are allotted to graceful and cultivated children."—Express.

Another epoch in the phenomenal run of "Hazel Kirke" at the Madison Square Theatre, and this time an important one, being the anniversary performances of the piece, February 4th is the date, and a souvenir of unusual value, even for the Madison Square, is to be given away on this occasion. A medal plaque, manufactured by the Gorham Company, with appropriate design and of exquisite workmanship, will be a souvenir of real and lasting value, and one hitherto unknown in the history of the stage.

Among the features of the London season, so far as it has progressed, the comedy of "The Upper Crust" stands out quite prominently. The piece is playing at Toole's Folly Theatre, and the house is crowded at each representation. "The Upper Crust" will be seen at Wallack's in the course of a few weeks.

"THE ORTHOEPIST."

Among the recent publications of Messrs. D. Appleton & Co., is a manuel by Mr. Alfred Ayres, one of our local elocutionists, entitled "Orthoepist," which we discover, by consulting Noah Webster, means one skilled in correct pronunciation. The book is certainly very handsomely gotten up—red edge, illuminated title-page, and so on—and looks as though it might contain something we do not know, and possibly would like to know. On this point, however, we will not venture an opinion, until we shall have seen more of it than its outside, which is so taking that it will, doubtless, find favor with many buyers of books for holiday presents.

THE MORTON HOUSE, as it is now called, and which until recently was known as the Union Place Hotel, is one of the most conveniently located establishements of its kind in this city. Under the auspices of its present proprietor (Mr. James M. Morton) it has been completely rehabilitated, and affords to guests—either transient or permanent ones—an exceedingly comfortable and homelike sojourning place. From its close contiguity to the principal amusement resorts, it offers peculiar advantages to professional people, while the large retail business and accessibility by innumerable cars, stages and elevated railroads is a desideratum not to be overlooked. The service and cuisine of the MORTON HOUSE are A 1, and under the management of Mr. MORTON, who is an experienced and capable caterer, it will doubtless rapidly increase its liberal patronage it has already enjoyed.

JUDGMENT ON THE CAT.

This is the ruling on a famous Indian case at the moot court of a law school: Certain persons owned local tales of cotton. That the rats might not destroy the cotton, they purchased a cat. It was agreed that each of the four should own a particular leg of the cat, and each adorned with beans, &c., the particular leg apportioned to him. The cat accidentally injured one of its legs, and the owner of that member wound a rag around it, soaked in oil. The cat going too near the hearth, set the rag on fire, and being in great pain rushed in among the cotton bales, where she was accustomed to hunt rats, and set fire to the cotton and rags, which were consumed. The three owners of the unhurt legs brought a suit against the other to recover the value of the goods destroyed. The defendant denied his liability, and claimed to recover damages against the plaintiffs. The Court said: The leg that had the oiled rag on it was hurt; the cat could not use that leg; in fact, it held up that leg and ran with the other three legs. The three unhurt legs, therefore, carried the fire to the cotton and alone are culpable. The injured leg is not to be blamed. The three parties who owned the three legs with which the cat ran to the cotton will pay the whole value of the bales to the partner who was proprietor of the injured leg.

"Novel" Definitions.

"Which Will She Choose?"—The one who has the most money, of course.

"The Toilers of the C"—All the tenors who are trying to cultivate the si de fa tone.

"From Thistles—Grapes?"—Ah, no, certainly not—Watermelons.

"The Wandering Heir"—A fly on the butter.

THE STAGE.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

Black fur is not effective as a trimming for brown cloth.

Guipure lace is coming very slowly, but surely, into fashion.

A new use for the fine wool Jersey cloth is to make open mantles.

The newest muffs in London are made of a piece of the dress.

Muffs of feathers are rather pretty, but why spoil them with tiny bows?

Bows on your dress skirt, if you like, but they must have six loops and two ends.

An Englishwoman's ideal five-o'clock tea-cloth is made of white bordered damask cloth.

The most elaborate trains do not measure more than from seventy to seventy-five inches.

Pearl trimming nearly half a yard wide goes well with mauve brocade, and costs only $40 a yard.

The ball dresses seen so far this season look as if the patterns were exhumed from ancient fashion books.

Fashion in Paris is raving over old jewelry, especially in silver; the blacker and more tarnished, the better.

Chinchilla fur, frail though it be, is extremely becoming to blondes, and is the first choice for very young ladies.

It is a mark of the increase of refined taste that natural flowers are now more used than artificial, especially by ladies at home.

A thin woman should wear fluffy hair, for the closely-dressed style now so often seen exaggerates the leanness of lean ladies.

Some very original dresses have been imported in which a yellow green-like bronze is the prevailing color of the satin brocade.

The most fashionable opera cloaks in Paris at present are cheaille capes, reaching only to or just below the waist, with hoods attached.

White violets made of satin are the choicest gardenias were upon. Violets, lettes just at present, although Parisians use poke-berries of black with golden stems and tendrils.

Novel starfishes represent diminutive oysters and lobsters, miniature newspapers, letter envelopes, and pearl bootjacks inlaid with mock rubies.

Silk stockings now come in colors which match the dresses worn by children to balls and parties. In scarlet these are plain, except for a delicate vine pattern extending far up on the ankle. A few have striped sectional figures, and a few are half black and half red, or half light and half dark blue as far as the knee. Dots as large as a pea are also embroidered in a contrasting color on plain ground; stripes are varied by having embroidery on every alternate stripe. Canary-color is fashionable for children's hosiery just now, and the material is raw or dressed silk.

Round hats in the English styles seem to be the most popular. The stylish hat furnished with closely-rolled brims were found to be so becoming during the last season that they are retained for winter wear, and are trimmed with ostrich heads, peacocks' breasts, white gulls' breasts, shading into gray, short wings, impo sas heads, tropical birds, and also long ostrich plumes, carried over the crown of the hat. Another favorite style of hats is the Beaharnais of black long-nap beaver, large and broadbrimmed, and trimmed with an immense bow of plush set in the middle of the crown, and run through its folds with a tuning fork of Roman gold.

The prelate cape, which is a part of the pilgrim's suit, is now seen in fur, the remainder of the costume being trimmed with a corresponding kind. A cap in correspondence is often a stylish addition, and a complete costume is provided with a small muff.

A jacket much admired abroad is so much covered with narrow black braid in a Hungarian pattern, that the black cloth of which it is made can scarcely be seen. The design is Hungarian, the jacket being lined with scarlet satin, turned back at the fronts, sides and back, and held by frogs of passementerie.

The novelty among sleeves is an approach to the mutton-leg design, with shirrings at the wrist and elbow. The Chinese and Japanese sleeves described in previous articles remain in favor while some effect of change is given to ordinary coat-sleeves by the divided Directoire cuff, the military corded cuff, and a shirred cuff set above a wrist-ruffle.

A luxurious novelty of fashion, which a literary gentleman might possibly assume, is an imported gown of a costly Oriental stuff filled into the neck-band, somewhat in medieval cloak form. Slippers to accompany show beading, as well as gold-thread embroidery, and the smoking-cap is of velvet embroidered in an Oriental pattern and finished without a tassel, or with one fastened down. Smoking-caps are now worn back on the head like the Persian fez.

A Watteau robe or tea-gown, recently designed, is of pale yellow gros-grain, combined with yellow moonlight and trimmed with coffee-colored Languedoc lace. Loops and knots of fire-colored satin ribbon are added, and the indispensable hood which is of Languedoc lace, shows a large black velvet butterfly embroidered with gold, and poised upon the tip. Another, similar, is placed upon one side of the corsvat bow of yellow-white mull and Languedoc lace, which finishes the costume at the neck.—Domestic Monthly.

Extracts from a Bundle of Papers by Paul Siegvelt.

The capticus spirit also, often betrays its possessor into gross errors of judgment; besides destroying amiability of character. Should one look narrowly or curiously into the motives of a good action? If the deed be worthy may we not praise it and be content? When we begin to speculate concerning motives, we wander in a boundless sea, often without soundings, star or compass; and where not seldom every tide and current is treacherous. A thousand causes, of which we are unconscious, may warp our judgment; and one may easily condemn a fellow being, whom the searcher of all hearts would acquit.

What's done we partly may compute,
But know not what's resisted."

If superior sagacity and wisdom enables us to see the faults of our familiar friends, or superior virtue acquit us of similar failings, may we not better exercise those stronger powers of mind and heart in self-restraint, so as to avoid a reflection on his weakness, rather than so as to humiliate our weaker brother. Social intercourse is the wine of life; and possibly we may thus contrive to avoid disturbing the less, while we joyfully drain the cup.

From thinking of once self simply as disconnected with society, a man's mind is unhinged, and his views of life become wholly erroneous.

That Reminds Me.

The way for a bad boy to go on a bender is over his mother's knee.

An Oil City man traded off his gun for a dog, because he wanted to "get something to boot."

Chimney Sweep is the name of a trotting horse. It is said that at his last race he fairly flue.

An old bachelor will shriek for a better half when a counterfeit fifty-cent piece is shoved off on him.

Little Johnny says: "Talk about patent base-burning stoves! Why, my mother's slipper is a hot enough base burner for me."

A young lady being asked by a rich bachelor, "If not yourself, who would you rather be?" replied, sweetly and modestly, "Yours truly."

A fellow who married a poor girl said he married her to take care of her, but now when he staid out late at night she took hair of him.

"I don't mean to reflect on you," said one man to another. "No," was the reply, "you are not polished enough to reflect on any one."

A man writes to an editor for $4 "because he is so terribly short," and gets in reply the heartless response, "Do as I do; stand up on a chair."

Square umbrellas have been introduced in Paris, but some one says they are just as bad as the old kind, because they are never round when wanted.

The only time a girl doesn't see every other fellow on the street is when she has just got a letter from her own fellow and is reading it as she goes along.

Servant (to Irish laborer): "Here is some beer, Pat, if you care to have it; but I'm afraid it's quite dead." Pat: "Oh, dead, is it? Sure, then, darlint, it's I'm the boy to bury it."

It's about an even thing between a man and an orange peel. Sometimes the man throws the orange peel into the gutter, and sometimes the orange peel throws the man into the gutter.

"When you play that sonata," said a teacher to his pupil, "you must show off your fingering as much as possible." "Don't you fear about that," she responded; "I'll have a finger-ring on every finger."

"My friend, how far is it to the next town?" asked the pedestrian. "Only about a little ways," was the evasive reply. "Well, is it four, six, eight, or ten miles?" "Jass, I think it is," was the answer.

A mother noticing her little daughter wipe her mouth with her dress sleeve, asked what her handkerchief was for. Said the little one: It's to shake at the ladies in the street; that's what papa does with his.

"Kind words never die." How bitterly does a man realize that terrible truth when he sees all the kindest words he ever used in his life staring at him from his published letters in a breach of promise suit.

A few years since at the celebration of our national anniversary, a poor pedlar who was present, being called upon for a toast, offered the following: "Here's health to poverty; it sticks to a man when all his friends forsake him."

A conceited young country parson, walking home from church with one of the ladies of his congregation, said, in allusion to his rustic audience, "This morning I preached to a congregation of asses!" "I thought of that," observed the lady, "when you called them your 'beloved brethren!'"

"Give me the hand that will never deceive me," said a young Cleveland sprig in the presence of some young ladies the other evening. A young lady who had heard of the young man's propensity for the gaming table, dryly remarked, "I guess a straight flush is about the kind of a hand you want."

A little boy having heard a missionary tell how the natives of South Africa live, on going home said: "Ma, I wish I was a little South African boy." "Why, Georgie?" exclaimed the mother, "what ever put such an idea into your head?" "Cause their mothers don't wear slippers," said little George.

An Irishman, who had a pig in his possession, was observed to adopt the constant practice of filling it to repletion one day and starving it the next. On being asked his reason for doing so, he replied, "Och, sure and isn't it that I like to have bacon with a strake o' fat and a strake o' lean equally, one after t'other?"

The young milkman and his girl stood before the justice of the peace. "You take this milk—shem!—this man for butter or for worse?" the mighty man of the law enquired. The girl said it never a curd to her before, but she supposed she would if that was the only whey.

A lady, whose cook went to a wake, was given notice by her a fortnight afterwards that she was going to be married. "Who to?" asked the mistress. "Plase ma'm, to the husband of the corpse." Why, does he love you?" was the next question. "Oh, yes, ma'am; he said I was the light of the funeral."

"Why, Franky," exclaimed a mother who was taking dinner at a neighbor's, "I never knew you to ask for a second piece of pie at home!" "Cause I knew I wasn't no use," mumbled Franky, as he crammed his mouth with the "second piece."

A gentleman hails a carriage and bids the driver convey him to the other extremity of the city. "I say, boss," says the jarvy in his most coaxing tones, "it's a long way, and up hill, and the horses is tired—would mind going somewhere nearer here?

Lately a gentleman sat down to write a deed, and began with "Know one woman, by these presents." "You are wrong," said a bystander, "it ought to be 'know all men.'" "Very well," answered the other, "if one woman knows it, all men will, of course."

Just before visiting the menagerie, Johnny had a passage-at-arms with the young aunt who assisted at his toilet, and with whom he flew into a rage. Arrived at the menagerie, Johnny was immensely interested in a strange foreign animal with a long, lithe body. "What animal is that, Mamma?" he asked. "It is called an ant-eater," my son. After a long silence—"Mamma, can't we bring Aunt Mary here some day?"

Said a Galveston school teacher: "If I have ten apples and give you five and your big brother five, what will be left?" "I'll be left," responded the younger brother, "for he will get away with all of them. That's the kind of a presidential candidate he is."

When a Boston man invites you to dinner, and heads a postscript N. B., he means "no beans."

It was a young housekeeper who set the cake she had baked for a surprise party out of doors one cold night to be frosted.

Many a book agent and canvasser has discovered that the "welcome" on a doormat refers to the third house around the corner.

A medical writer asks: "Does position affect sleep?" Well, rather; if you're hung up by your trowsers on a spiked fence, you won't sleep very soundly.

An exchange says the Egyptian obelisk cannot stand our climate. It will have to. It is asking a little too much of the people to change their climate to suit the obelisk.

"Not to have been to the Children's Carnival and Ball, Academy of Music, Feb 7th, will be to miss one of the great social events of the season."—Graphic.

"The spirit of poetry, pleasure, refined movement and grace running through all the scenes of the carnival invest it with an indescribable witchery."—Herald.

WALLACK'S.

"The School for Scandal" is one of the most popular as it is one of the best English standard comedies, and its revival never fails to awaken a keen and lively interest. It is closely allied with the fortunes of this house where its presentation has ever been dignify successful both in an artistic and financial sense. Outside of Wallack's, "The School for Scandal" is seldom seen, and for reasons that must readily suggest themselves. It is not within the capacity of all actors to surmount the difficulties that must be overcome in a natural and graceful impersonation of the character of Sir Peter Teazle, and there are many light comedians unequal to the task of Charles Surface, while the parts of Lady Teazle and Mrs. Candour require the most judicious treatment in order to be effective. Since the play was last presented at this theatre—some two years since—four gentlemen prominent in the profession are now missing, three being removed from the scene of their earthly lives, while the fourth one (Mr. Chas. Coghlan,) is now playing an engagement in London. Of the three removed by the inexorable hand of death has been satisfactorily filled, and in the person of Mr. Osmond Tearle, is found a most able exponent of the character of Charles Surface. Mr. John Gilbert seen in his time-honored part of Sir Peter Teazle, and Miss Rose Coghlan and Madame Penisi respectively, enact the characters of Lady Teazle and Mrs. Candour with consummate tact and ability. Mr. W. Elton appears as Moses, Mr. Harry Edwards as Sir Oliver Surface, Mr. Gerald Eyre as Joseph Surface, Mr. Albert Rogers as Sir Benjamin Backbite, and Mr. D. Leonard as Crabtree. The representations of "The School for Scandal" are necessarily limited, as other plays are now ready for production.

"The Children's Carnival and Ball may be said to be under the especial patronage of that very fastidious old dowager Good Society. She is always present and brings with her a host of relations in laces and diamonds, and with all the flutter and ceremony of a gorgeous reunion."—Express.

Various novelties are in course of preparation at Wallack's, and one or more are ready for immediate production, but are deferred in consequence of the signal success attending the present old comedy revival.

SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS.

At the San Francisco Minstrels Opera House, the management of "Original Minstrels" continues to attract large crowds of interested spectators. The impersonation of the Moore of Venice by Signor Chas. Salvini Bardus, in one of the funny efforts of that gentleman, and serves to keep the house in roars of laughter. This is not generally the effect caused by the representation of "Othello," but, Mr. Bardus is making it so originally, and his interpretation of the dusky hero brings down the house, and this is all that any of the great masters of the art ever accomplished or ever expect to accomplish. In a word Barbus as Othello is simply tumorous. The bill at the Minstrel's is replete with a variety of acts and sketches, all of them laughable and fun-provoking, some few of which are here enumerated, but the mention of all would encroach upon our somewhat limited space. Mr. Harry Richmond, the great contriloquist; Johnson and Powers, the renowned terpsichorean artists; Prof. Harry M. Parker, and his wonderful Mastodon Dog Circus, and Mr. Harry Rickmond in his famous specialties are part and parcel of the excellent features nightly presented. The performance which is the best of its kind in the United States, concludes with a humorous sketch, entitled "A Hot Night in the City."

Mme. Demorest's Monthly Magazine continues to maintain its well-earned position on account of the superiority of its Fashion Intelligence, the beauty and usefulness of its illustrations, and the general excellence of its reading matter.

BALL NOTICES.

On the evening of Feb. 3d the Annex Charity Ball in aid of the Nursery and Child's Hospital will take place at the Academy of Music. On this evening, as on previous occasions, a large gathering of the elite of New York's society will certainly be present. There is always an atmosphere of respectability attending the annual reunion in the cause of charity that are not so observable in other similar affairs, and the manes of the ladies and gentlemen patronizing the ball are prominent in the highest circlee of society. General Grant and lady will attend the Charity Ball this year.

The Fourteenth Annual Ball of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, N. Y. Lodge No. 1, will take place at the Academy of Music on Monday evening, Feb. 11th. Nearly all the distinguished lights of the dramatic profession have signified their intention of attending this year's ball. The proceeds of the affair will be used in ministering to the wants of the sick, infirm, and disabled among its members; and with this worthy and benevolent object in view, the committee of management look to the generous impulses of members of the profession and the public generally.

"Where's the Cat?" is the somewhat singular title of a comedy shortly to be produced at Wallack's, and which is said to abound in novel situations and mirth-exciting incidents. The play is meeting with great favor in London, and its merits are unquestionable.

"The early part of the Children's Carnival and Ball fete consists of a series of tableaux, illustrations of historical incidents, floral impersonations and allegorical dances, in which the parts are allotted to graceful and cultivated children."—Express.

Another epoch in the phenemenal run of "Hazel Kirke" at the Madison Square Theatre, and this time an important one, viz.: the anniversary performance of the piece, February 4th is the date, and a souvenir of unusual value, even for the Madison Square, is to be given away on this occasion. A medal plaque, manufactured by the Gorham Company, with appropriate design and of exquisite workmanship, will be a souvenir of real and lasting value, and one hitherto unknown in the history of the stage.

Among the features of the London season, so far as it has progressed, the comedy of "The Upper Crust" stands out quite prominently. The piece is playing at Toole's Folly Theatre, and the house is crowded at each representation. "The Upper Crust" will be seen at Wallack's in the course of a few weeks.

"THE ORTHOEPIST."

Among the recent publications of Messrs. D. Appleton & Co., is a manual by Mr. Alfred Ayres, one of our local elocutionists, entitled "Orthoepist," which we discover, by consulting Noah Webster, means one skilled in correct pronunciation. The book is certainly very handsomely gotten up—red edges, illuminated title-page, and so on—and looks as though it might contain something we do not know, and possibly would like to know. On this point, however, we will not venture an opinion, until we shall have seen more of it than its outside, which is so taking that it will, doubtless, find favor with many buyers of books for holiday presents.

THE MORTON HOUSE, as it is now called, and which until recently was known as the Union Place Hotel, is one of the most conveniently located establishments of its kind in this city. Under the auspices of its present proprietor (Mr. James M. Morton) it has been completely rehabilitated, and affords to guests—either transient or permanent ones—an exceedingly comfortable and homelike sojourning place. From its close contiguity to the principal amusement resorts, it offers peculiar advantages to professional people, while to the general public its easy accessibility by innumerable care, stages and elevated railroads is a desideratum not to be overlooked. The service and cuisine of the MORTON HOUSE are A 1, and under the management of Mr. MORTON, who is an experienced and reliable caterer, it will doubtless rapidly increase the liberal patronage it has already enjoyed.

JUDGMENT ON THE CAT.

The is the ruling on a famous India case in the matter of a law school. Four men bought several bales of cotton. That the rats might not destroy the cotton, they purchased a cat. It was agreed that one of the four should own a particular leg of the cat, and each select with bonds, &c., the particular leg multioned to him. The cat accidentally injured one of its legs, and the owner of that member wound a rag around it, and an oil. The cat, going too near the fire, set the rag on fire, and being in grain rushed in among the cotton bales, fire she was accustomed to hunt rats, set fire to the cotton and rags, which were consumed. The three owners of the unburnt legs brought a suit against the other to recover the value of the cotton destroyed. The defendant denied his liability, and claimed to recover damages against the plaintiffs. The Court said: The law says that the injured member is, was hurt; but the cat could not use that leg; in fact, it held up that leg and ran with the other three legs. The three cahurt legs, therefore, carried the fire to the cotton and alone are culpable. The injured leg is not to be blamed. The three parties who owned the three legs with which the cat ran to the cotton will pay the whole value of the bales to the partner who was proprietor of the injured leg.

"Novel" Definitions.

"Which Will She Choose ?"—The one who has the most money, of course.

"The Toilers of the C"—All the tonors who are trying to cultivate the sit de poitrine.

"Five Thistles—Grapes?"—Oh, no, certainly not.—Watermelons.

"The Wandering Heir"—The one in the butter.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

Black fur is not effective as a trimming for brown cloth.

Guipure lace is coming very slowly, but surely, into fashion.

A new use for the fine wool Jersey cloth is to make opera mantles.

The newest muffs in London are made of a piece of the dress

Muffs of feathers are rather pretty, but why spoil them with tiny bows?

Bows on your dress skirt, if you like, but they must have six loops and two ends.

An Englishwoman's ideal five-o'clock tea-cloth is made of white bordered damask cloth.

The most elaborate trains do not measure more than from seventy to seventy-five inches.

Pearl trimming nearly half a yard wide goes well with mauve brocade, and costs only $40 a yard.

The ball dressee seen so far this season look as if the patterns were exhumed from ancient fashion books.

Fashion in Paris is raving over old jewelry, especially in silver; the blacker and more tarnished, the better.

Chinchilla fur, frail though it be, is extremely becoming to blondes, and is the first choice for very young ladies.

It is a mark of the lucrease of refined taste that natural flowers are now more used than artificial, especially by ladies at home.

A thin woman should wear fluffy hair, for the closely-dressed style now so often seen exaggerates the leanness of lean ladies.

Some very original dresses have been imported in which a yellow green-like bronze is the prevailing color of the satin brocade.

The most fashionable opera cloaks in Paris at present are chenille capes, reaching only to or just below the waist, with hoods attached.

White violets made of satin are the choicest garlands worn upon London toilettes just at present, although Parisian use polo-cerises of black with golden stems and teadrils.

Novel scarfpins represent diminutive oysters and lobsters, miniature newspapers, letter envelopes, and pearl boojacks inlaid with mock rubies.

Silk stockings now come in colors which match the dresses worn by children to balls and parties. In scarlet these are plain, except for a delicate vine pattern extending far up on the ankle. A few have striped sectional figures, and a few are half black and half red, or half light and half dark blue so far as the knee. Dots as large as a pea are also embroidered in a contrasting color on plain ground; stripes are varied by having embroidery on every alternate stripe. Ordinary-color is fashionable for children's hosiery just now, and the material is raw or dressed silk.

Round hats in the English styles seem to be the most popular. The stylish half barbarians with closely-rolled brims were found to be so becoming during the last season that they are retained for winter wear, and are trimmed with ostrich tips, peacocks' breasts, white quills' breasts, shading from gray, short wings, imps as heads, tropical birds, and also long ostrich plumes, curled over the crown of the hat. Another favorite style of hats is the Beau harnais of black boug-nap beaver, large and broadbrimmed, and trimmed with an immense bow of plush set in the middleof the crown, and run through its folds with a tuning fork of Roman gold.

The prelate cape, which is a part of the pilgrim's suit, is now seen in fur, the remainder of the costume being trimmed with a corresponding kind. A cap in correspondence is often a stylish addition, and a complete costume is provided with a small muff.

A jacket much admired abroad is so much covered with narrow black braid in an intricate pattern, that the black cloth of which it is made can scarcely be seen. The design is Hungarian, the jacket being lined with scarlet satin, turned back at the fronts, sides and back, and held by frogs of passementerie.

The novelty among sleeves is an approach to the mutton-leg design, with shirrings at the wrist and elbow. The Chinese and Japanese sleeves described in previous articles remain in favor while some effect of change is given to ordinary coat-sleeves by the divided Directoire cuff, the military corded cuff, and a shirred cuff set above a wrist-ruffle.

A luxurious novelty of fashion, which a literary gentleman might possibly assume, is an imported gown of a costly Oriental stuff filled into the neck band, somewhat in medieval cloak form. Slippers to accompany show beading, as well as gold-thread embroidery, and the smoking-cap is of velvet embroidered in an Oriental pattern and finished without a tassel, or with one fastened down. Smoking-caps are now worn back on the head like the Persian fez.

A Watteau robe or tea-gown, recently designed, is of pale yellow gros-grain, embroidered with yellow organdie and trimmed with coffee-colored Languedoc lace. Loops and knots of fire-colored satin ribbon are added, and the indispensable hood, which is of Languedoc lace, shows a large black velvet butterfly embroidered with gold, and poised upon the tip. Another, similar, is placed upon one side of the crown of yellow-white mull and Languedoc lace, which finishes the costume at the neck.—Domestic Monthly.

Extracts from a Bundle of Papers by Paul Siegvolk.

The captious spirit also, often betrays its possessor into gross errors of judgment; besides destroying amiability of character. Should one look narrowly or curiously into the motives of a good action? If the deed be worthy may we not praise it and be content? When we begin to speculate concerning motives, we wander in a boundless sea, often without soundings, star or compass; and where not seldom every tide and current is treacherous. A thousand causes, of which we are unconscious, may warp our judgment; and one may easily condemn a fellow being, whom the searcher of all hearts would acquit:

"What's done we partly may compute,
But know not what's resisted."

If superior sagacity and wisdom enables us to see the faults of our familiar friends, or superior virtue acquit us of similar failings, may we not better exercise those stronger powers of mind and heart in self restraint, so as to avoid a reflection on his weakness, rather than so as to ridiculate our weaker brother. Social intercourse is the wine of life; and possibly we may thus contrive to avoid disturbing the wine, while we joyfully drain the cup.

From thinking of one's self simply as disconnected with society, a man's mind is unhinged, and his views of life become wholly erroneous.

That Reminds Me.

The way for a bad boy to go on a bender is over his mother's knee.

An Oil City man traded off his gun for a dog, because he wanted to "get something to boot."

Chimney Sweep is the name of a trotting horse. It is said that at his last race he fairly flue.

An old bachelor will shriek for a better half when a counterfeit fifty-cent piece is shoved off on him.

Little Johnny says: "Talk about patent base-burning stoves! Why, my mother's slipper is a hot enough base burner for me."

A young lady being asked by a rich bachelor, "If not yourself, who would you rather be?" replied, sweetly and modestly, "Yours truly."

A fellow who married a poor girl said he married her to take care of her, but now when he staid out late at night she took hair of him.

"I don't mean to reflect on you," said one man to another. "No," was the reply, "you are not polished enough to reflect on any one."

A man writes to an editor for $4 "because he is so terribly short," and gets in reply the heartless response, "Do as I do; stand up on a chair."

Square umbrellas have been introduced in Paris, but some one says they are just as bad as the old kind, because they are never round when wanted.

The only time a girl doesn't see every other fellow on the street is when she has just got a letter from her own fellow and is reading it as she goes along.

Servant (to Irish laborer): "Here is some beer, Pat, if you care to have it; but I'm afraid it's quite dead." Pat: "Oh, dead, is it? Sure, then, darlint, it's I'm the boy to bury it."

It's about an even thing between a man and an orange peel. Sometimes the man throws the orange peel into the gutter, and sometimes the orange peel throws the man into the gutter.

"When you play that sonata," said a teacher to his pupil, "you must show off your fingering as much as possible." "Don't you fear about that," she responded; "I'll have a finger-ring on every finger."

"My friend, how far, is it to the next town?" asked the pedestrian. "Only hoost a little ways," was the evasive reply. "Well, is _ four, six, eight, or ten miles?" asas, I think it is," was the answer.

A mother noticing her little daughter wipe her mouth with her dress sleeve, asked what her handkerchief was for. Said the little one: It's to shake at the ladies in the street; that's what papa does with his.

"Kind words never die." How bitterly does a man realize that terrible truth when he sees all the kindest words he ever used in his life staring at him from his published letters in a breech of promise suit.

A few years since at the celebration of our national anniversary, a poor pedlar who was present, being called upon for a toast, offered the following: "Here's health to poverty; it sticks to a man when all his friends forsake him."

A conceited young country parson, walking home from church with one of the ladies of his congregation, said, in allusion to his rustic audience, "This morning I preached to a congregation of asses!" "I thought of that," observed the lady, "when you called them your 'beloved brethren!'"

"Give me the hand that will never deceive me," said a young Cleveland sprig in the presence of some young ladies the other evening. A young lady who had heard of the young man's propensity for the gaming table, dryly remarked, "I guess a straight flush is about the only hand you want."

A little boy having heard a missionary tell how the natives of South Africa live, on going home said: "Ma, I wish I was a little South African boy." "Why, Georgie!" exclaimed the mother, "what ever put such an idea into your head?" "Cause their mothers don't wear slippers," said little George.

An Irishman, who had a pig in his possession, was observed to adopt the constant practice of filling it to repletion one day and starving it the next. On being asked his reason for doing so, he replied, "Och, sure and isn't it that I like to have bacon with a strake o' fat and a strake o' lean aqually, one after t'other?"

The young milkman and his girl stood before the justice of the peace. "You take this milk—them!—this man for butter or for worse?" the mighty man of the law enquired. The girl said it never a-curd to her before, but she supposed she would if that was the only whey.

A lady, whose cook went to a wake, was given notice by her a fortnight afterwards that she was going to be married. "Who to?" asked the mistress. "Pizze man, to the husband of the co'pse." Why, does he love you?" was the next question. "Oh, yes, ma'am; he said I was the light of the funeral."

"Why, Franky," exclaimed a mother who was taking dinner at a neighbor's, "I never knew you to ask for a second piece of pie at home!" "Cause I knew I want no use," mumbled Franky, as he crammed his mouth with the "second piece."

A gentleman hails a carriage and bids the driver convey him to the other extremity of the city. "I say, boss," says the jarvy in his most coaxing tones, "it's a long way, and up hill, and the horses is tired—would mind going somewhere nearer here?

Lately a gentleman eat down to write a deed, and began with "Know one woman, by these presents." "You are wrong," said a bystander, "it ought to be 'know all men.'" "Very well," answered the other, "if one woman knowe it, all men will, of course."

Just before visiting the menagerie, Johnny had a passage-at-arms with the young aunt who assisted at his toilet, and with whom he flew into a rage. Arrived at the menagerie, Johnny was immensely interested in a strange foreign animal with a long, lithe body. "What animal is that, mamma?" he asked. "It is called an ant-eater," my son. After a long silence—"Mamma, can't we bring Aunt Mary here some day?"

Said a Galveston school teacher: "If I have ten apples and give you five and your big brother five, what will be left?" "I'll be left," responded the younger brother, "for he will get away with all of them. That's the kind of a presidential candidate he is."

An exchange says the Egyptian obelisk cannot stand our climate. It will have to. It is asking a little too much of the people to change their climate to suit the obelisk.

WALLACK'S.

We are so accustomed to recording successes at Wallack's that the triumph or the new play of "Forget-Me-Not," (which, by this way, was a profound success in London,) came not at all as a surprise; but rather as an event that was fully expected and for which we had made ample preparation. To be brief, then, "Forget-Me-Not," forms yet another to be added to the long list of fine plays that have been produced under the auspices of Mr. Wallack. Its author or, rather its authors, for two gentlemen—Messrs. Merivale and Grove—were engaged in its construction, are to be congratulated on the good work they have done, for a healthier moral tone than has "Forget-Me-Not" is seldom or never met with. Notwithstanding this fact, it is not of the goody-goody kind either, but occasionally verges into the extremely romantic and sensational, while its climaxes are naturally, strongly and cleverly wrought. The play is in three acts, and employs but a somewhat limited cast, among which, however, are found several of the names that the patrons of this theatre delight to honor. Miss Rose Coghlan, who plays the heroine of the piece, had been absent from the box office for nearly three months, and her reappearance is very warmly greeted. Mr. Osmond Tearle as Sir Horace Welby acquitted himself admirably and still further confirmed the good impression he made on his first appearance at this house. Madame Ponzial, Miss Stella Boniface, and Miss Agnes Elliott acted with their usual skill and intelligence; while Messrs. Harry Edwards, Gerald Eyre, Harry J. Helliday and H. Pierson, jr., excellently and artistically embodied their several parts. "Forget-Me-Not," both as to the play and the players will long and pleasantly dwell in the memory of those who witness it. The drama will be repeated until further notice.

SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS.

The comicalities of Messrs. Birch & Backus are of the kind that never pall upon the senses. Their antics are wholly grotesque, and excite merriment and good humor in all who look upon them. For the Christmas Holiday week a bill of unusual excellence is submitted, and the patrons of this cosy little theatre can anticipate a treat such as is not often available. A travesty of "Othello," with Mr. Backus and Mr. Birch in the titular rôles, will be found a most laughter-provoking sketch. Mr. Birch's conception of the character of the Moor of Venice differs in some degree from that of Salvini, but it is none the less original, notwithstanding. Messrs. Carroll & Gorman are the latest comedy additions, and their eccentric specialties have proved vastly amusing. The musical features are under the direction of Mr. Mullaly. The San Francisco Minstrels are worthy in every respect of the liberal patronage they enjoy, and so long as they continue to present the excellent and attractive programmes which are invariably found, they will monopolise the profitable business they now deservedly enjoy.

"THE ORTHOEPIST."

Among the recent publications of Messrs D. Appleton & Co., is a manual by Mr. Alfred Ayres, one of our local elocutionists, entitled "Orthoepist," which we discover by consulting Noah Webster, means one skilled in correct pronunciation. The book is certainly very handsomely gotten up—red edge, illuminated title-page, and so on —and looks as though it might contain something we do not know, and possibly would like to know. On this point, however, we will not venture an opinion, until we shall have seen more of it than its outside, which is so taking that it will, doubtless, find favor with many buyers of books for holiday presents.

ENTHUSIASM.

"By Jupiter, Bowers, your Principes are my Heart's Delight!" They give me many Happy Hours! I'm an Old Judge in such matters, and your goods have a Solid Value, which should make them All the Rage! You ought to set The Fashion in your line, and I prophesy a Great Success for you!"

The above rapturously was poured forth by a gentleman after being shown through the complete stock of cigars kept by Wm. C. Bowers & Co., wholesale dealers, at No. 10 Duane Street, New York City. It provoked a hearty laugh from the senior partner, for the words emphasized were all names of standard brands of cigars dealt in by this young and enterprising firm. And what is more, every word uttered was solid truth, as can be ascertained by any one who feels interested enough to peruse by investigating the matter.

For the Holidays. Ladies in search of Useful Presents will find a very complete assortment in every department of our store at reasonable prices. New designs in Duchess Lace Scarfs, Fichus and Vests, and Novelties in Made-up Lace Goods of every description. Plain, Hemstitched and Embroidered Handkerchiefs. Silk Mufflers and Ties. In Fancy Goods we will show Fine Pocket-books, Card Cases, Combs and Brush and Nail Sets, Mirrors, Fans and Fancy Baskets, Shell Combs, Hair Ornaments, Scarf Pins, &c. E. A. Morrison, 203 Broadway, between 19th and 20th Streets.

Fitznoodle in America.

AMERICAN HEREADITY.

Ya as, Jack Carnegie has frequently drawn my attention to the fact of Americans imbodying in sweats, nonogwams, and othah unsightly parwaphernalia which a fellaw would naturwally think out of place in a wepublican country, as Americans pwetends to be, where all differences in wank are theowretically wepudiated.

But aw, othah cuwiah considewation when weflecting, I have come to the conclusion that the majowity of Amewicans who have succeeded in sewaping enough money togethah to live in fal ah style, and to considah themselves aw wefined wepwesentative sweats, weally weak with snobbewy.

Aw I cahn't possibly understand why people with any descwiption of hwains should seek to distinguish themselves by having engwaved or painted on their carwiages, their silvah-plate, their witing-paph, and aw, I suppose, oven their fwying pans, such widiculous and pwetentious awwangements.

Aw, I cahn't pwecisely see the object of it, ethah; faw the mo-ah possession of a cwest is no evidence of the good-bweeding or wespectability of the fellaw who has been ildidic enough to wun about to pwocure it, and wich fellaws in twade, or their families, cannot take in any English fellaw who knows what is the aw cowwect thing, by imagining that an elaborate escutcheon, for which they have pwobably paid sevewal dollahs to some signpaintah, will gwestly impwess anbody with their antiquity, or gweatness, or lineage.

In fact, as a wule, there is no such thing as family in Amewica, as we understand it at home, ye know. The country is too aw juvenile faw that. Englishmen and fowweignahs who came over heah two or thwee hundwed ye-ahs ago were generally adventuwahs and smuwines; but they all visited Amewica faw the puwpose of bettering their condition, and, natuwally, in some instances, aw, succeeded.

I don't see how an Amewican, born in this gweat country, has any wight at all to awmowial bearings. His Mass Murgenwite's family is wespectable enough, and they don't pwetend to such things.

If it be weally necessawy to ah, the fellaws ought to choose something appwopwiate. Let the man who sells oystahs have an oystah dwawn on his shield; a wetiwed butchah, a wound of bocf; a countwy gwocewy shopkeepah, a bottle of tweacle—I think that's the name of the natuwal—and any fellaw who has been in twade, the numbah of dollahs he has succeeded in extwacting fwom his customahs, on his cwest, et cetewa, aw.

Aw I don't mean to say that some of them were not tolewably, aw quite decent, but that they were obliged to get out of their sphere in nothing gwatified to their cwedit, although it is not absolutely a disgwace. Now some of the younguy cull themselves aw Kickewbockahs, or cawabineers, and pwetend to signals of declawations of something or othah, and never cease to dwell on the vewy wemawkable wealth, pwivity, bewavewy, virtue and talents of the child who conceived the foundaiw of their families befaw they became aw wefugees.

Then, if some of these ignowant sweats were only convwent in their fowwaidwy; but Jack says they make a fwightful hash of it. They saw nuz up in a shapeless jumble the diffewent colors in a shield, wegawdless of their being adapted for noblemen, gentwy or paiinces. A helmet is a aw helmet, no mattah to what wank it belongs; and in one of the wemotest consequence whether a lion is wampant or gardient, a stag bwppent or at gaze, or in any othah position.

I saw a fellaw the othah day with a pwodigious numbah of quartahwings appwoaching to the woyal arms. I don't believe he knew any bettah. Faw his mattah, even at home, ye know, there are many wetiwed checsemongahs and publicans who make themselves equally widiculous.—Punch.

The Slowest Horse.—The old story of the man who, having hired a horse to attend a funeral, and was cautioned against over-driving, said he would keep up with the procession if he killed the horse, is regold in a different shape of an Illinois cantidate for nomination to office. Wishing to reach the convention at a distant town he hired a horse at a livery stable. In spite of the candidate's pounding and swearing the animal was so slow that the man did not get there until after the convention had adjourned, and so he lost his nomination. He denounced the owner for letting him such a beast. The proprietor of the stable, on investigation, discovered that he had let him have one of the horses which "Hearse horse, hearse horse!" cried the baffled politician, "Why, if a man should start to a funeral with such a horse as that he would not reach the grave till two weeks after the resurrection."—Detroit Free Press.

THE STAGE

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

Ribbons have become real occasionally realistic—works of art.

Red, brown, and gendarme-blue satin petticoats have appeared for full and winter wearing.

Muffs to match hats promise to be popular. The match is most successful when the articles are of different genders.

Long pins of jet, shell, or gold, and tiny Japanese fans—everything indeed that is little and pretty—are worn in the hair.

Large sleeves form the conspicuous feature of the new cloaks this season, furtrimmed garments taking precedence in that respect.

Street costumes are now generally made up with warm linings, so that a supplementary wrap may be dispensed with as long as possible.

In a set which includes a sash, a neck tie, and a pair of stockings, the gloves have a top-border in Roman colors to match the other articles.

The color of forms can be preserved, we are told, by dipping them in strong brine and dried with vertlgris—in sort, by pickling them before drying.

A tissue which is likely to meet with great success for waists and trimmings next winter is silk fabric combined with gold. The gold threads are striped across the goods.

A mammoth bow of very wide satin ribbon in bow worn on the left side just below the waist line. This gives a pretty finish to many simple toilettes, especially when worn with a mulle fichu.

A "lambrequin effect" is where a broad strip of passementerie has a fringe below it. The lambrequin, being just a trifle passe in fanciful effects, seeks a new lease of fashionable life in dresses, and is quite pretty.

In silver threads oxidized on rose-color, a design in lustrous silk represents roses, buds, and leaves. In beaded satin at fifty dollars a yard the design is a daisy five times the natural size, in pink and ruby beads and iridescent jet.

The basque waist has assumed so many vagaries recently that it almost defies description or any placing in the catalogue. In rich costumes it is either long or short, and appears with a trimmed skirt, or with a skirt and drapery overskirt.

Some of the most elegant carriage dresses have a cloak to match; thus, a costume of bronze satin has a cloak of bronze velvet, trimmed with the same rich plush which forms skirt-panels, vest, and cuffs, upon the dress.

The shapes of cloaks are various this winter, the long and dignified styles, which are out-growths of the raglan and the princesse sacque, being no more favored than the dolman forms which give broadest and velvets such a handsome prominence.

The most dressy princesse design is now made of plush, with basque points formed at the back from the extension of the waist. Various colored velvets, used for this always-elegant design, and rich black silks with mixtures of velvet are as much admired as any for the house.

Armure and Scotch plaid silks, as well as ribbons, are seen on entire suits, and there are applique as well as woven garnitures provided for wool costumes. Moss, olive, seal brown, walnut oak, snuff, leaf, and nut-brown; pansy-purple and heliotrope, flame-color and poppy-red, canary and fire color, &c., are the leading colors, which are presented either alone or in blendings and shadings.

The fact that red shoes are now chosen to accompany little girls' fancy-party and dancing-school dresses will not surprise any one who has observed the growing invasion of this bright color; but that gilt buttons should close red shoes, thus turning them into something almost gaudy, has not been quite looked for.

Extravagance in gloves and shoes is something that most women can understand, if not excuse; and the fact that the Empress Eugenie spent over five thousand francs a year for gloves alone has been enough to establish her similarity to others of the sex who have only limited opportunity, perhaps, to be equally lavish.

Wool plaide and Middlesex flannels in dark shades are popularly represented with kilt-pleated skirts and upper garments almost invariably completed with a hood. The Jersey suit, so called, comprises merely a skirt with a kilt-pleated flounce, and a deep scarf drapery for an overskirt. The latter shows a gay facing at the back, where it is simply draped.

Silver muffe similar to the gold muffe described last season is now in vogue for trimming dark velvet hats, which are beaded. A long and wide scarf of this muffe is held down upon the hat by half-moons of black enamel, heightened by flecks of silver. Laces of elegant qualities also appear in novel forms on some of the most dressy hats, point de Brabant covering a hat of crimson satin trimmed with old-gold satin merveilleux and white ostrich feathers, which is intended for concert and theatre occasions.—Domestic Monthly.

During the intermission or after the Play, call in Atwood's Drug Store, adjoining this Theatre, and examine Dr. scott's Electric Hair Brush. It is a most remarkable article and a handsome Christmas present for a lady or Gentleman. It is not a Wire Brush, but made of Pure Bristles, and Mr. Atwood will take pleasure in showing it to all. Take your Lady with you.

That Reminds Me.

When a Boston man invites you to dinner, and heads a postscript N. B., he means "no beans."

It was a young housekeeper who set the cake she had baked for a surprise party out of doors one cold night to be frosted.

Many a book agent and canvasser has discovered that the "welcome" on a doormat refers to the third house around the corner.

A medical writer asks: "Does position affect sleep?" Well, rather; if you're hung up by your trousers on a spiked fence, you won't sleep very soundly.

An exchange says the Egyptian obelisk cannot stand our climate. It will have to. It is asking a little too much of the people to change their climate to suit the obelisk.

A young man said to a girl named Pete, "Come, Pete, let's have a kissing match. I can kiss you faster than you can kiss me." She refused, saying "no one could come Pete with her."

Now that the election is over, the men that were fit for nothing else but to ornament the street corners and chew out politics, have assumed their winter quarters on the sugar barrels in grocery stores.

Said a Galveston school teacher: "If I have ten apples and give you five and your big brother five, what will be left?" "I'll be left," responded the younger brother, "for he will get away with all of them. That's the kind of a presidential candidate he is."

PARK THEATRE.

COLVILLE OPERA BURLESQUE COMPANY.—The present is the last week of the admirable organization, which has become thoroughly established as unexceptionable in the character of entertainment offered. The bill now before the public, "Robinson Crusoe," is perhaps the most legitimately successful since Brougham's "Pocahontas," presenting every member of the company, including Mlle Rose Rosem, the charming vocalist. The music is charming and admirably arranged. The costuming is gorgeous and captivating, and the piece in its entirety is presented with new scenery and effects.

There will be matinee performances on Wednesday and Saturday, beginning at 2 o'clock, and over at 4.15. The evening performance begins at 8 o'clock, and is over at 10.20, when carriages should be in attendance. During the engagement of the Colville Burlesque Company, children will be admitted to all parts of the house at the rate of half price. Matinee prices, 50 cents. Reserved seats, 50 cents extra.

"DOT" AT THE PARK THEATRE.

Of the many home stories that have come from the pen of Dickens, none is more beautifully touching than the "Cricket on the Hearth." The great magician seems in it to have played upon every chord of human sympathy, and struck them with a loving hand that has called forth the sweetest melody. The whole atmosphere of the story is one of domestic love and contentment; not the least shadow but comes across it—as from Dot's little heart, only seems in the end, to make him feel it under it—to make the sunshine more beautiful little Dot. The old toyman, Caleb Plummer, is another of the choicest bits of character painting that ever came from the pen of Dickens. The old fellow is the incarnation of a quaint and over-brimming goodness that is as beautiful as it is attractive. The delicate consideration that would keep from poor blind Bertha the knowledge of the misery around her, displays itself upon every occasion; and the old man is willing to work, starve, and be abused so long as his little charge can be made happy and comfortable. His is the very humor under affliction that permeates the whole story, and gives it the flavor of drollery with which Dickens was so fond of garnishing his literary fare. As for Dot, she is the very picture of the ideal wife, and there is no wonder that the cricket sings to her and the home fairies make her fireside happy.

Of course, a story in which there is so much to interest has been put upon the stage in dramatic form, and Dion Boucicault, who gave stage existence to Irving's "Rip Van Winkle," has done the same good service for Dickens' "Cricket on the Hearth." The play was produced in the city fourteen years ago at the old Winter Garden, and had been seen at the same house five years previous, with Mr. Jefferson as Caleb Plummer. Since then, Mr. Jefferson has played the part very seldom, and it has become one of the specialties of Mr. John E. Owens, who will appear in it during the forthcoming engagement at the Park Theatre, commencing next month. To those unfamiliar with the drama a rare treat is in store in the coming revival. All the salient features of the novel are retained and the dramatist has displayed his skill in so arranging them, that each is seen to the best advantage, and the dramatic interest is sustained to the end. The spirit of Christmas time will assert itself, and the happy atmosphere of domestic happiness that permeates the home of Dot and even the squalid quarters of Caleb, gives it a charm that appeals at once to the more refined sentiments of the heart. The play is to be produced at the Park Theatre in a manner in every way commensurate with its importance. There are appropriate and picturesque scenic effects which will be availed of with avidity by the management, and the cast will be unusually strong. Mr. John E. Owens will play Caleb Plummer; Miss Mc. C. W. Coulduck and Miss Minnie Palmer are assigned the important characters of John Peerybingle and Dot, while the merry laugh of Miss Effie Gilman will be heard to advantage in the droll character of Tilly Slowboy. The rest of the cast is equally effective, one of its notable features being the appearance of Miss Bess Stevens, who was the original impersonator of Bertha, the blind girl, at the Winter Garden. There is every reason to anticipate a warm reception for Mr. Owens, and there cannot fail to be a desire to see once more the representation of one of the most beautiful of all dramatic style.

WALLACK'S.

T. W. Robertson's delightful military drama of "Ours" is revived at Wallack's this week. It is now four years since this play has been seen at this theatre. It will be given with its charming effects as well as the original music and new costumes and accessories. Mr. Wallack resumes his great original role of Hugh Chalcote, justly regarded as one the most exquisite impersonations in his repertorie. Mr. John Gilbert is again seen in his fine role of Sir John Shendryn, and Mr. Charles Coghlan plays for the first time here, the part he created at the Prince of Wales Theatre, London, that of Angus McAllister. Miss Effie Germon is again seen as the sprightly Mary Netley, and Mme Ponzo as the demure Lady Shendryn. Miss Stella Boniface plays Blanche Haye, the heroine, and Mr. E. M. Holland as Sargeant Jones; Mr. Chas. Rockwell completes the cast as Prince Perovsky. The mounting of the play is, of course, on the very best scale customary at this theatre, and the revival will doubtless be attended with much pleasure by the patrons of the house, and generally substantial result.

THE SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS

There seems to be no end to the popularity of the inimitable Birch, Wambold and Backus. The bill this week is especially designed to show the full organization to the best possible advantage. It includes the customery first part, and then a number of scenes and sketches. This presents that quartette of fun-makers Billy Birch, Charley Backus, Add Ryman and George Thatcher, besides Dr. S. Wambold, Johnson and Powers, G. P. Russell, H. W. Frillman, Charles Stevens, the great Ricardo, Charles Gibbons and W. Raymond. An evening passed at the San Francisco Minstrels is always an evening well spent, for the programmes selected are always of the best, and combine such sweet singing with such uproarious acts and jokes that the auditor experiences great pleasure. It is, perhaps, to this, more than to any other cause, that the San Francisco Minstrels owe their long career of success. The orchestra, under the direction of W. S. Mullaly, is a feature of the entertainment. This orchestra, one of the best in the city, renders the latest compositions with a perfectness of execution which has made the name of Mullaly renowned in amusement annals.

The Ball of the CERCLE FRANCAIS DE L' HARMONIE occurs at the Academy of Music on the 20th inst. (Monday). Among the features of the dancing programme will be a Quadrille Chevaleresque and Les Dames des Antipodes. The ball of this organization is one of the features of the society season in New York, and the managers promise that it will this week exceed the brilliancy and elegance all those of the same kind which have preceded it. The ball this year is altogether the hands of its managers, there being no outside speculation in tickets. This will assure a more satisfactory condition of affairs than has been usual in past years, and will contribute to make this season's ball very notable as an enjoyable social event.

The grand Military and Civic reception of the Old Guard, will take place at the Academy of Music, on Thursday evg., and promises to be of more than usual attraction. Invitations have been issued and accepted by the principal military and naval officers of the United States, and also to those of the militia in the principal cities. Judging from the past receptions of this celebrated corps, the coming one will eclipse all its predecessors in attendance and brilliancy.

The Second Annual Ball of the Wyanoke Club, will be held at Irving Hall, on Friday evening, January 23th, 1879. Prof. Joyce's Fifth Ave. Band and Orchestra has been engaged for the occasion. Judging from the success which this organization, nact with last season, the amat promises to be the fovent of the New Yeni.

THE DRAMA.

Ada Cavendish has been engaged to appear at the Park Theatre this Spring.

John T. Raymond opens in "Risks" at the California Theatre, on the 20th.

Joaquin Miller is writing a play for Laura Don.

Haverly has Booth's Theatre for six weeks, beginning January 27th.

John T. Raymond will play in "My Son" during his California engagement.

Max Strakosch took out opera on the strength of Kellogg and Cary; he had to bring it back on a Lita.—The Mirror.

Miss Flira O'Connor is now leading lady at Heuck's Opera House, Cincinnati, the position formerly occupied by Miss Clara Cole.

Negotiations are pending for the engagement of Miss Fanny Davenport at the Standard in the Spring.

Horace Wall, as agent for E. A. Sothern and J. S. Clarke, has had papers served on George Parkes and Frank Hatmenergy, restraining them from playing in "Engaged." Parkes announces his intention of playing It nevertheless.

Miss Courtney Barnes, who has just returned to town after a tour with John T. Raymond, has accepted an offer from Joseph Jefferson to play Menic, on his travels.

Yankee Locke has engaged Marlton Downing, of Boston, to write him a play. Unlike many pieces written expressly for a star, nearly all the characters have good parts. Mr. Locke is greatly pleased with his purchase and intends to try it the latter part of this season, preparatory to making an extended starring tour during the next season. The title, as yet, has not been made public.

"Ours" is again proving its enormous vitality and drawing power at Wallack's. It is nearly five years since the play was last done, and it comes to many of the present audience as a novelty, while to the remainder it is welcome as an old and dear friend. Never has it had a more perfect setting than now, and the cast is on the two leading men. Mr. Wallack and Mr. Coghlan have never been excelled.

The full cast of the "Cricket on the Hearth" at the Park Theatre, will be as follows: Caleb Plummer, John E. Owens; John Peerybingle, C. W. Coulduck; Edward Plummer, H. S. Duffield; Mr. Tackleton, J. C. Padgett; Dot, Miss Minnie Palmer; Bertha, Miss Sarah Stevens; Tilly Slowboy, Miss Ada Gilman; Mrs. Fielding, Mrs. Paul Bratone; May Fielding, Miss Josephine, Baker. Miss Sarah Stevens was in the original cast at the Winter Garden.

Miss Emily Rigl will fill the part of the Countess in "Almost a Life," through the provinces.

On the 27th of January, Haverly's "Dunites" company comes to Booth's Theatre for a four weeks' season.

Barthy Campbell, says an exchange, is the only American specialist that ever had a call before a curtain in the City of London. The play was "The Virginian," and the Theatre the St. James, in Picadilly.

The San Francisco Minstrels are turning away people every night; they have inserted new jokes, new fun, and manage one of the most attractive entertainments in New York.

"The Banker's Daughter," Mr. Bronson Howard's new American play, has met with an enthusiastic reception, and proven a success. It is produced with a very strong cast and most beautiful scenery, it will be given nightly, and at the matinee on Saturday, at the Union Square Theatre.

Manager Abbey intends mounting "Dot" at the Park in most admirable style. Ten chorus singers have been engaged to represent the fairies "Midsumer Night's Dream."

Next to "Caste," "Ours" is the best of Robertson's plays, and given as it is at Wallack's with the effect of the march-past, and the military band, never fails to attract and delight large audiences. When first played in England these military episodes were wanting, but upon these introduction here, they won the unqualified approval of the author, who was only prevented from introducing them at the Prince of Wales's, by the smallness of the stage.

The Standard Theatre company that take the round East and West, playing Mrs. Effie Hendersou's very successful piece of "Almost a Life," will be under the management of the popular Treasurer, Mr. C. Burnham.

The following is the schedule of the balance of the season at the Park Theatre: John E. Owens will follow the Colville Burlesque Opera Company with "Dot," the "Cricket on the Hearth;" W. S. Gilbert's "Engaged," with the regular Park Theatre Comedy Company, after which Mlle. Marie Aimee will make her farewell season on April 14.

THE STAGE.

Chit-Chat and Notes of Fashions.

Moire and striped satin fans, to match evening dresses, is the latest.

Many handsome ball dresses shown by the leading dressmakers this season are without a train.

A novelty in hair pins is to have them covered with silk thread, to keep them from slipping out of the hair. They are made in three colors—golden, brown and black.

The Bric-a-Brac gallery at TIFFANY'S is very interesting at the present time, with its bestiary, ancient Jewelry, rare Porcelains, Pictures and Bronzes.

Gray hair is the most expensive. A switch of the blue-gray, as it is called by hair dealers, was recently sold in Paris for $150. It is said that one of the importers of human hair in this city buys $50,000 worth from a single house in Europe per year.

Some of the most elaborate and beautiful designs in bath-day, breakfast, tea and dinner Cards, are to be found at DEMPSEY & CARROLL'S establishment, Union Square.

Bria and steel buttons are worn on dark woolen materials. Many suits of dark cloth are very amply trimmed with collars and cuffs of black beaver fur. Striped silks and satins are also used in trimming for camel's-hair dresses.

A noted clergyman asked the following riddle of a lady on New Year's day: "When was beef the highest?" Not being answered, he said, "When the cow jumped over the moon." "But I know when it is higher still," said the lady. "When, Madame?" "Why, when the cow is in the milky way."

The Knickerbocker fashion of calling on the first day of the year seems to be dying out gradually in this city, while it is in full force in Albany, where all old time customs are reverenced. Here, the gentleman sends a card with "Congratulations" written in one corner there, if a card is sent, it is accompanied by a bouquet, a box of bon-bons, or that special confection known in Albany as a "New Year's Cake"—a large, hard, round, flat substance, filled with Anise seed, which will keep for months.

Velvet, combined with satin of the same shade, is a favorite material for reception dresses this Winter. The shape most used is the Princess with a bird tail train. Garnet, plum, dark, gray, are the approved shades, garnished with bouquets of artificial flowers and real lace. Generally dresses of this description are made high in the neck, with long, or half-long sleeves. Velvet is not considered appropriate for young ladies, but decidedly the fabric for women of mature years.

Mrs. Lucy Hooper, who writes such delightful letters of correspondence from Paris, says that the heroine of "The Danicheffs" is a real person; a lady who was not long since present at several entertainments in that city, in all the brilliancy of her unfaded and wonderful beauty. The plot of that play, she also avers, was taken from actual life.

A gentleman having the name "Shiner," said something of his ancient lineage to a lady recently, who remarked, "Oh, yes; your family name is mentioned in the Bible—it was the 5th plain of Shiner when the tower of Babel was built." "True," said he, "and our family crest represents a man looking from the top of that tower."

There is a pretty device in a motto for a German favor. A ribbon bow with long ends, on one side of which is printed a line of "The Frog he would a Wooing go." This is for a gentlemen. A corresponding shoulder knot for a lady, has the second line of the couplet, and the two who wear the couplet are expected to be partners. Another new favor has an oblong card containing questions and answers, which are cut apart and divided between the gentlemen and ladies.

Very pretty neck wear for ladies, is made of the colored bordered Mull handkerchiefs, sold at Boutillier's, for fifteen cents each. Breton lace is sewed on the edge, and as they are very soft and sheer, they are exceedingly becoming. White lace is much worn instead of ribbon strings for bonnets, particularly by ladies in mourning.

Tarleton and silk combined make a pretty combination for party dresses for young girls. A very charming dress of this description was worn on New Years by a society belle. The skirt was a succession of plaited flowers of white tarleton on pale salmon colored silk to waist, which was a small basque of the same material. The sleeves were of the tarleton, plaited close to the arm, and long, with a small garniture of silk about the hand. The skirt was made demi-beam and square. Just below the waist, in front, there was a garland of coral red roses and green leaves, carried like a sash to the back, and there drooped with long sprays of roses, buds and leaves. There was also a small Bouquet de Corsage, and a minute bunch of roses at the waist and in the hair. No jewelry was worn with this dress.

MESSRS. HERTS BROTHERS, 806 and 808 Broadway, opposite Eleventh street, have now on exhibition at their extensive warerooms a large assortment of all the newest styles and latest designs, of their own manufacture, of Tools, Cabinets, Pedestals, Wall Cabinets, Screens, Easy Chairs and Rockers, suitable for Holiday gifts. Visitors treated with every consideration.

Much arsenic is used in the manufacture of crape, the disagreeable odor arising from it causing not infrequently serious illness. This fragrance is removed by the process of STEVENS & Co., of Domestic Building, Broadway and Fourteenth street, who renew old crape and make it equal to new, and able to withstand heat, dampness and sea air.

The preparation known as Rye and Rock, has achieved great success this season. It combines the healing qualities of whiskey and rock candy, and has proved a most effective cure whenever used. The preparation is made by PERSCOUT, of 75 Chambers street, New York, where it is supplied to the trade.

MR. J. H. JOHNSTON is the originator of a new line of business; he advertises largely that he will pay the highest price for "Duplicate Wedding Presents" of every description, and he has invented a way of erasing inscriptions, so that he can re-sell everything, from a Solid Silver Tea Set to a Napkin Ring or a Watch, at less than cost of manufacture. He can be found at 150 Bowery.

THE DOMESTIC PATTERNS are considered the most reliable by modists, of any manufactured in the city. They are designed by French artisans, and are elegantly and elaborately finished. Every style of garment is made for street, carriage, home, reception and ball dresses. The DOMESTIC MAGAZINE is edited in the Fashion Department, by Mrs. Fanny Howell, with considerable ability, while the literary part is under the management of Dr. Newpher, whose "Small Talk" and "Book Notices" are very good. The general commissioners are made by first-class writers. Both the Domestic Patterns and the Domestic Magazine have a wide celebrity. They are to be found at the Domestic Machine Building, corner Union Square and Broadway.

There are times and places tolerant only of the Cigarette, tenderly white and sweetly fragrant. VANITY FAIR is the sweetest thing for Cigarettes. Best dealers have it.

Spots Upon the Sun

do not visibly diminish the brilliancy of that luminary, but spots upon the face, no 6 or none materially detract from female beauty. Fortunately LAIN'S BLOOM OF YOUTH banishes all such defects and renders the complexion clear and spotless. Sallowness, pimples, blotches, freckles and other disfigurements quickly disappear under its magical influence, and the texture of the skin is wonderfully improved by its use. It is an indispensable adjunct of the feminine toilet.

EMERSON'S MINSTRELS.—This clever company of minstrel performers have already made a highly favorable impression on the public, and have the satisfaction of playing to large audiences each evening. Very little change was found necessary in the programme last week, but the utmost appreciation of the spectators was exhibited at each representation. Billy Emerson's song and dance business is extremely good, while his exhaustless wit and pleasing vocal powers all tendering him unsurpassed as an end man. Mr. J. H. Talbot is another eccentric comedian and vocalist who is greatly admired. Messrs. Fraser, Dempster, Palmer and Hoskinworth, the sentimental vocalists, are honored with numerous encores, and the musical act of "The Clothes Dealer," by Emerson and Palmer, causes great merriment. The instrumental performances are a pleasing feature of the programme. A new bill is announced for the present week. Matinee on Saturday.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—That delightful burlesque of "Kenilworth" has been revived by the Lydia Thompson troupe. It is a beautiful and fitting finale to a brilliant season. If luminaries are the choicest features of the several novelties that preceded it, and it employs the various talents of the gifted troupe to the best possible advantage. The Thompson troupe have met with more favor this season than ever before. They have, as usual, introduced to us any quantity of new songs and flash faces, among them (let us forget, if we can, Rose Coghlan), have been several who will haunt us with their sprightliness and beauty until Lydia returns. This is the last week of the troupe at Wallack's. "Kenilworth," the neatest, the nicest of burlesques, will be given every night, and on Saturday next the season will close here with a grand benefit to Miss Lydia Thompson, who, we all know, has instigated and executed most of the mischief herself, so far, and who will, on this occasion, have the town at her feet.

SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS.—St. James Theatre—Messrs. Birch, Backus and Wambold are now perfectly satisfied that they made an advisable change in removing to this town, as the support recorded them in their new abode is far in advance of anything experienced even in their palmiest days in Broadway. The performances remodeled by the company are extremely attractive, something new being introduced almost every evening, so that one can visit the St. James Theatre frequently, and find novelty with each visit. Beaumont Read is gaining popularity very rapidly, and the other members of the troupe continue up to their old-time standard. Matinee on Saturday.

BRYANT'S MINSTRELS.—The twenty-third street opera house has rarely contained a more enthusiastic audience than the one's that have greeted this excellent company since their return to us this season. Dan Bryant's minstrels consist of twenty-four performers, and, among them are such names as Dan Bryant, Kelly and Leon, Nolee Seymour, Dave Reed, W. H. Rockwell, Barney and Emerson, all of them are, as announced and heralded by the press, the best, and one of the strongest company's that have ever been gathered together. The first part, entitled "The Laughing Shakers," is based on the respective ends, Wm. H. Brockway in the middle, and Norman, Dwyer, Templeton, D'Alberte, Raymond, Solo Vocalists, is a constant feast of music, wit and fun. The second part introduced "The Only Leon," in a well selected song, entitled "When Sammy Comes Home," and as "Madame Pokey Lightfoot." It is a matter of difficulty to review the merits of an artist, who has no equal in a specialty he has made his own. Tumultuous applause accompanied each encore, and as the burlesque of Lemon proved, he confirmed his position at once with the audience, who were evidently gratified with his lyric efforts. Dan Bryant and Nolee Seymour follow Leon, with a new negro act, called "Up in Boltom." In fact each and every one of this large company may be classed as the best that can be got, and there should be no mistaking the fact. We advise all to pay Bryant a visit, if they do not come away tired with laughter, it will not be Mr. Bryant's fault

PATTI AND MARIO.—Mr. Strakosch's admirable combination, one of the most brilliant ever offered to the public, is now complete, is creating great interest in musical circles. Mario is the great historical tenor of the century, and Carlotta Patti is the sweetest singer of our age. We are thus offered in one entertainment the fame and the fascination of two eras. It is not often that concert goers of this generation are presented them. The last concert of the Patti-Mario troupe takes place next Tuesday night, at Steinway Hall.

WHITE'S ATHENÆUM.—This first-class Broadway house is in the flood-tide of success. Novelty after novelty is presented, and the entertainments crowded with everything that is fresh delight the crowds who fill this beautiful bell night after night. J. H. Budworth has now, with others, been added to the large company, and so rapid are the changes, so incessant the fun, that it is difficult to characterize the special features. There is no doubt what Charley White has hit upon exactly the kind of entertainment that is most popular. He is himself no small part of the attraction, and he has succeeded in providing a Broadway Variety Show where a man need not be ashamed to take his wife and children. Matinee performances are given on Wednesdays, and the bill is then, in every sense, as full and as good as in the evening.

BOOTH'S THEATRE.—The appearance here this evening of Dion Boucicault is the dramatic event of the season. Already across the world over as the most prolific and successful playwright of the century, it remains for a new generation of playgoers here to discover in him one of the best actor dar ky. His reappearance in one of his best roles, that of Shawn in "Arrah-na-Pogue," is felicitous, for the support of the gifted Mrs. Boucicault in the part of Arrah is an additional attract ti n that has made the dramatic event of general interest. In addition, Mr. Sidel Barry, a Londoner, comes as an extraordinary player, appears as Michael Feeney, and Miss Gunnis as Stuart and Mr. C. Alexander make their first appearance in it. It will thus be seen that with the regular and full cast company of Mr. Booth's Theatre this celebrated play is most thoroughly equipped, and when we add that it has been produced as it never was before under the eye of the play-wright and from his original models, it will be seen that it justly becomes this our important theatric novelty of the moment.

RUBINSTEIN.—The great lion of the moment is Rubinstein. His concert to night, at Steinway Hall, will be a marvellous assemblage of the musical public of the Metropolis. A greater interest was never felt in a celebrity than in him. The troupe is a first-class one. Mlle. Liebhart, the prima donna, said to be the best dressed woman of the season, and Mme. Ormeni, the great comralto, have already created a sensation. Mr. Grau's season opens with unexpected eclat.

WOOD'S MUSEUM.—The management of Wood's Museum are assuredly second to none in this city for enterprise and liberality of catering. In addition to a stock company, embracing nearly forty artists, a supplementary burlesque org anization, comprising star performers of great celebrity, are retained upon the establishment. All pieces are produced with due regard to scenic and other effects, while the costumes and appointments are always exceptionally fine. The style of management most necessarily occurs for the theatre great popularity, while the museum department continues, as formerly, an immense attraction to the city. "Chow Chow" is a burlesque which displays the merit of scenic beauty, splendid costumes, and an incessant and constant variety of action. It is a reprise with taking music and the best of dancing, and it employs the talents of some of the best burlesque actresses that ever came to America. Miss Lisa Weber, Miss Markham and Belle Howitt are universal favorites, and would ensure the success of any burlesque. The afternoon performances at Wood's Museum continues to be justly popular. An entire change of Matinee bill this week will interest the public.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—The Union Square Theatre was always a pretty place, even when it was used exclusively for variety performances, but now, fitted up anew, there is not a place of amusement in the town that can surpass it in point of neatness, convenience nor in its tasteful richness of its decorations. People appreciate it as things, and they will be giving a generous patronage upon the establishment. The opening play of "Agnes" has made a genuine hit. We have already published the full cast, and must accord hearty praise to all concerned for their efforts, but there are several entitled to more particular mention They are Miss Ethel, who plays Agnes with grace and a delicate, womanly feeling, Mr. Mark Smith, who has a small part but invests it with an importance that it would rarely attain in any other hands than his, and Mr. Harkins, who, as the faithless husband, acts discretly and forcibly. Then there are Miss Pressy Mordaunt, Miss Phillis Glover, Miss Jennie Lee, Miss Mattayer, Mr. Lamb, Mr. Parkes, Mr. Barnet, Mr. Leonards, Mr. Mackay and Mr. Montgomery, who play their respective parts very ably. None of the parts, with the exception of the leading one, are strong, and the members of the company deserve all the more credit on that account for doing their duty so well The scenery, as we predicted, is very handsome. The bombie of Agnes, the interior of the Grand Opera, the salon in Agnes' house, and the private office of the Prefect of Police are beautifully realistic scenes.

IRVING HALL.—The Sunday night concerts have been opened at Irving Hall, and should at once become very popular, the price of admission being placed as low as fifty cents, and the attractions to be submitted of the highest order being very great. Messrs. L. F. Harrison and E. Uhlig are the managers, and tickets may be had at almost any of the prominent tick t offices throughout the city.

We know not who penned the graceful tribute to Rubinstein which Mr. Grau has beautifully issued, but there are internal evidences that it must have flown from the polished pen of a Ruskin, a Grant White, or a Darcy. It is all but that such beautiful thoughts and such exquisite language are successfully employed in the cause of art.

Mrs. Howard Paul, we understand, comes back to the stage after her long and successful career in "Drawing-room Entertainments." She has signed a long engagement with Mr. Bouccicault for Covent Garden, where she is to play a leading and novel part in "Babil and Bejoo."

The Theatre Francais has just been in danger of losing one of its most charming actresses. Mlle. Croizette had been suffering from a nervous fever, when in a moment of delirium she jumped from her bed and ran to a drawer in which there was a charged revolver. Fortunately her mother was by and wrested the arm from her.

"Nym Crinkle's" last article was entitled "Joyous Imbecility." We have read the article and we pronounce the title one of the most appropriate he has yet chosen.

The new musical act per paper, the Arcadian, is a weekly. Its prospectus is brief and to the point. It says the paper will be devoted to concerts, theatres, pictures and artists. The enterprise has met with the warmest encouragement from all classes interested in art. There is a great need of a good musical sheet in New York, which will be up with the times, and able withal.

At a public table the other day, two "gentlemen" got into vehement dispute upon a subject of which they were profoundly ignorant. A large dog, whose slumbers on the hearth were disturbed by the altercation, rose up, and began to bark, furiously. "Hold your tongue you brute," said an old gentleman, who had been quietly sipping his wine; "you know no more about it than they do." The table was instantly in a roar, and the brawlers were abashed.

DEMOREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE, for October, is resplendent with all the new and fashionable styles for Ladies' and Children's dress for the Fall and Winter. The literary contents of this number combines a varied and entertaining selection of Stories. Music, and much useful readi g

DEMOREST'S YOUNG AMERICA, for October, has its usual store of entertaining stories and other novelties for his juvenile friends, which cannot fail to please, and make them more intelligent and useful. The new and attractive list of premiums offered to the subscribers of Demorest's Young America for 1873 are among the marvels of enterprise and liberality.

A broom, with a heavy handle, was sent as a wedding gift to a bride, with the following sentiment:

"This trifling gift accept from me,
It's use I'd recommend:
In sunshine use the handy part,
In storm the other end."

A very helpless Pittsburgh tailor advertises for "one or two sturdy girls to help on pantaloons."

The performer on the kettle-drums at a certain Staat's theatre in Saxony was very fond of doing a dram now and then. During the representation of a grand five-act opera one evening, he felt a craving for a little drop; he smacked his tongue again and again against the roof of his mouth, without having a chance for two long hours of satisfying his inclination. At length, he saw an opportunity in the fourth act, where he had a rest of sixty bars. The temptation was too great, he could no: resist it, for the wine shop was only a few paces from the theatre. Scarcely had he finished his last roll upon his drums, ere he laid down his drumsticks, and, as if he had been shot, rushed out of the theatre towards the wine shop counting all the while: One, two, three, four, seven, eight, nine—he enters—eleven, twelve—the shop. Thirteen—Good evening—fourteen, fifteen—small go of brandy—sixteen—but quick—seventeen, eighteen, nineteen—here!—thank you (drinks)—twenty, twenty-one, twenty two, twenty-three—(drinks)—twenty-four, twenty five, twenty-six—(drinks, "A-h-h!")—twenty-seven, twenty-eight—here is—twenty-nine—the money!—thirty, thirty-one—another go of brandy!—two, thirty-three, thirty four—(go is brought)—thirty-five—(he drinks)—thirty-seven, thirty-eight, thirty-nine, forty—here it—forty-one—the money—forty-two, forty-three—Good evening—forty-four—Landlord—forty-five, forty-six—I'm rather—forty-seven—pressed for time—fifty, fifty one, fifty-two—He again wends his way to his place in the orchestra, where, as he counts fifty nine, and—bang! as he counts sixty, he joins in the tutti. If that is not making the best use of one's time, it would be difficult to say what is.

Some gentlemen are remarkably particular about their appearance in the parlor or on the street, others are careless and pay little attention whatever to the important matter of dress. We cordially recommend COLFAX & OVERTON, Merchant Tailors, 234 and 235 Broadway, to gentlemen who take a pride in being stylishly dressed. The store is always well stocked with fashionable fabrics and their artists first-class.

Fashionable Gossip.

Governor Bullock and family, of Massachusetts, Mr. James R. Osgood, publisher, of Boston, are among the arrivals in Paris.

Grand Duke Alexis has sailed from the Cape of Good Hope for Amoy, China.

Mr. William J. Florence, the well-known and favorite comedian, arrived from Europe last week, bringing with him a rare dramatic novelty.

The Princess Salm-Salm, well remembered in this city, has become a convert to Catholicism, and, weary of fashionable life and the world's people, has entered a convent at Innspruck, in the Tyrol.

The venerable German Field-Marshal Von Moltke is living quietly in the little Silesian town of Schweidnitz. He can be seen there every day in a long black frock-coat, smoking an enormous pipe, and reading the newspapers at the only cafe in the place.

Professor John Tyndall, the celebrated naturalist, intends to visit this country in October.

Colonel Wickham Hoffman, Secretary of the United States Legation, Paris, has been on a visit to the Isle of Wight, but returned to his post on the 1st of September.

Mrs. D. P. Morgan and family were among the passengers for Europe on Saturday, by the steamship Adriatic.

Adjutant Fitzgerald, of the Seventh Regiment, was recently married to Miss Venplanck, of Fishkill-on-the-Hudson.

Judge Emmett and family, 4 East Thirty-eighth Street, Mr. A. R. Strange and family, Hastings-on Hudson, and Mr. Joseph Potter, 129 West Twenty-second Street, arrived from Europe last week.

A brilliant and fashionable party of ladies and gentlemen were yachting last week off Newport, un board the Kingfisher, Captain Purry Belmont.

Madame Pauline Lucca has taken up her residence, for the winter, at No. 17 East Fourteenth Street, and not at the Clarendon, as has been incorrectly stated.

Mr. Joseph H. Crowell and family, 52 Livingston Street, Brooklyn, Mr. William Fanning, Jr., 37 West Thirty-ninth Street, Dr. J. W. Howe, 36 West Twenty-fourth Street, and Major W. D. Hyde, U. S. A., were among the departures for Europe last Saturday.

Mr. William C. Rhinelander and family, 14 North Washington Square, now travelling abroad, are expected home in about six weeks. The Misses Rhinelanders have been much admired in Europe.

The beauty of fall bonnets consists in their rich fabrics, exquisitely combined colors, their tinted feathers, bronzed leaves and fine lace. Of their heterogeneous shapes there is little to be said—they are simply caricatures, and fashionable milliners say they must be greatly modified to make them popular.

Mr. George K. Davis, of 20 East Twelfth Street, was married last week at Pittsfield, Mass., to Miss Cornelia G., daughter of the late Mr. Robert Colt, of that city. The wedding was celebrated at the residence of the bride's mother, and was a very elegant and fashionable event.

Mr. Edmund Yates, the eminent English author, was given a reception and banquet on the 16th inst., at the Lotos Club. A number of prominent gentlemen, in the musical and literary world, were present.

We understand that H. I. Hoffman, Esq., the well-known dramatic critic, is engaged upon a work which will soon be published, under the title "What I know about Theatres," and from his well-known literary abilities we have no doubt that the work will meet with ready sale.

Mr. Matt Morgan, of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, is at work upon a huge painting for Nibblo's Theatre.

The "Atheneum," one of the most promising young literary societies of our city, is in a flourishing condition. A series of entertainments will be given during the coming season, and the public can expect an intellectual treat.

Fifth Avenue has a new and very aristocratic hotel, the Grosvenor, located on the north-east corner of Youth Street. It is fitted up in gorgeous style, and already every room has been rented to Metropolitan families of wealth and social position for the ensuing winter—Mrs. Watts Sherman, Mr. Arthur Gilman and family, General Ward and Mr. H. T. Brown and wife among the number.

It is said that the fashionable weddings this Fall and Winter will be conducted after the English style, the bridegroom proceeding first to the church and waiting there for the arrival of the bride; no groomsmen.

The low-necked bodices of most ball-toilettes are made with very long points before and behind, a style which imparts slenderness even to the most robust figures. Frecility is not, however, fashionable at present, and many of our belles are taking cod-liver oil to attain the requisite degree of plumpness.

Mrs. J. Bancroft Davis, wife of the American agent at Geneva, Switzerland, resides in a beautiful villa on the borders of Lake Geneva, and has given, during the session of the Tribunal, a series of very elegant social entertainments. Mr. Davis is a nephew of the Hon. George Bancroft, United States Minister to Prussia.

"Idlewild," the home of the late N. P. Willis, the poet, at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, is owned and occupied by Mr. Courtney, 344 West Thirty-Fourth Street. The estate is one of the finest on the Hudson.

Captain Lopez, of Stonington, Ct., recently gave a entertainment at his country seat to the Brooklyn Yacht Club. It is spoken of as having been an unusually fine affair.

Miss Fanny Lowenstein, of West Twenty-eighth Street, daughter of Henry M. Lowenstein, the well known real estate broker, and a beautiful society favorite, has returned from a four months' sojourn at Saratoga.

Hon. Hamilton Fish has returned to his residence in Washington.

A daughter of General Birney is learning to set type in the office of the Boston Gazette, as a qualification for editing a paper in the South.

Hiram Powers is now Sir Hiram, having been made, by the Emperor of Brazil, a Knight of the Order of the Rose, "Carry the News," etc.

General John A. Dix spends the greater portion of his time at his summer home, Homestead, L. I.

Countess Blancherry, who, in one of the battles of the Franco-German war, fought, with a musket in her hand, as a common soldier, has just had the Cross of Legion of Honor conferred upon her.

Theatrical Items.

On Monday, September 30th, the well-known and popular actor, Mr. Dominick Murray, will make his re-appearance at Wood's Museum, in his great sensational drama, "Escaped from Sing Sing," which has met with such unvarying success at each representation. Mr. Murray's attainments are unquestionably of a high order, and his return to the museum will be heartily welcomed by his many friends and the public generally.

Mlle. Theresa has arrived in Paris from Russia, where she has been fulfilling a very lucrative and successful engagement. The Russians prove their civilization by glorifying Theresa as well as worshipping Patti.

Mlle. Albani, the Mignon of the Pergola Theatre in Florence, and the star at Covent Garden during the past season, has arrived in Paris.

The Lyceum Theatre, London, will re open with a new and original historical drama by Mr. W. G. Willis, entitled "Charles the First." In this Miss Isobel Bateman will play Queen Henrietta Maria, and Mr. Irving the King. The part of Oliver Cromwell will probably be sustained by Mr. Belmore.

The Opera Comique, in Paris, after being thoroughly renovated, will be re-opened this month; new works by MM. Paladilhe, Bizet, Ernest Gaultier, Reyer, Dubois, &c., are promised; B. Godrod's "Romeo et Juliette" will also be brought out, and Meyerbeer's "Perdon de Ploemel" (Deborah) will be revived.

We learn that the Lyric Club, for artists and amateurs, is now forming in London, under very distinguished auspices, with a very high subscription, to maintain its exclusive character.

Mr. Charles Mathews will make his re-appearance in London, at the Gaiety Theatre, on Monday, October 7th, and will play duris g his two months' engegement, a round of his favorite character.

Sir Michael Costa has left London on a tour in France, Italy and Germany, to study the present condition of the lyrical drama in those countries.

Miss Jennie Hughes, the favorite vocalist at the Comique, is reported to be engaged for the opening extravaganza at Niblo's.

The costumes, models of scenery, &c., for "Pygmalion and Galatea," have been received from England by Mr. Wallack.

Signor Bevignani has been appointed conductor at the Imperial Opera House at St. Petersburg, for the ensuing season.

Brida, composer and pianist professor at the Milan Conservatoire, has died at the age of thirty-six. He leaves a MSS. opera, "Maria Antonietta," not yet represented.

"Paris dans l'Eau," is the title of a dramatic absurdity, by MM. Blondeau and Monnet, produced at the Folies Dramatiques. In this Mlle. Scrivanock obtained a great success.

Mlle. Alphee Perron, first-class danseuse in Paris, has died ut Nice, aged twenty-three, leaving £1,000 to the poor.

A grand musical competition is now in preparation at Geneva for the 24th, 25th, and 26th of the month. More than a hundred choral instrumental societies are expected to attend.

Mlle. Desclee will create the chief part in Mr. Carr Thomas's new play of "La Femme de Clande," which is to be brought out at the Gymnase. There is also an important one for Mlle. Blanche Pierson.

The architects of Her Majesty's Opera House in the Haymarket deny the statement that there are any acoustic defects in the building, or that there has been any trial, as alleged, of the fitness of the building for Italian operas

The Ninth (Queen's Own) Lancers have erected a large marquee in the rear of the Royal Marine Barracks, at Woolwich, and the other night gave a "grand circus" performance for the amusement of the garrison. They have a well-trained stud of trick horses and ponies, and some of the non-commissioned officers and men displayed extraordinary skill in feats of horsemanship and gymnastic exercises. The Hon. E. Willoughby officiated as clown.

The Tamberlik Italian Opera Troupe, which will appear at the Academy next spring, comprises the following artists:—Soprani, Mme. Bianne, Mme. Baili Pacli and Mlle Bailini; contrali, Mme. Natali Testa and Mlle. Beaicolini; tenori, Enrico Tamberlik, Roncoui, Ruggieri and Testa; baritoni, Signors Peregi, Mari and Bartolini; bassi, Rossi Galli, Ricciardi and others. The season begins at Tavon Theatre, Havana, on the 15th of October, and the troupe afterwards will visit New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Chicago, Louisville, St. Louis and New Orleans.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

Patti is now making, on an average, two hundred and fifty thousand dollars per annum; she even, here is an hereditary talent. Her mother, Mlle. Barili, was a celebrated cantatrice; for her Donizetti wrote his "Assidio di Calais." Mlle. Barili was a very early age the tenor Salvatore Patti, with whom she married, and a host of lyric drames. Four children were the result of the marriage, the eldest of whom is married to Maurice Strakosch, Adelina, who prefers concerts to operas; Carlo, who is in the Italian army, who married Effie Germond; and Adelina, born February 10, 1843. At five years of age Adelina's mother found the child rehearsing the part of Norma, after having seen her mother act it on the stage in New York. Alboni heard of the child and went to see her. She asked her to sing. Adelina hid herself under a bed. Alboni told her she should not emerge from her retreat till she had sung an air of the "Somnambula." Adelina executed it lying flat on the floor. Alboni released her tiny prisoner, and, kissing the child, said, "To nous ferai toutes deux honneur!" The first time that Adelina sang in public was at New York, at eight years old. She stood on a table in order to be seen. Mme. Patti's success was immense. At Port-au-Prince she was bitten by a scorpion, and rescued by a negress from death; she was shipwrecked on her passage thence to Havana or Cuba, and when landed was all but killed by an earthquake. From thirteen to sixteen she gave up all regular study, and merely sang operas by ear, learning from her brother-in-law's performance. At seventeen she had thus acquired a perfect knowledge of nineteen operas, and made her début in November, 1859, at New York, as Lucia; on the 14th May, 1861, in London, in the "Somnambula;" and on the 17th November, 1862, in Paris, in the "Somnambula." She made £8,000 out of a single concert in London, whereas Grisi never gained a higher sum than £2,400 by any single performance. Tagliosi once at St. Petersburg made £8,000, and Baron Rothschild for two songs executed at his house sent her £400 last spring. She realized from the Italian Opera alone, in a single season, £34,000. "La Diva has found the Philosopher's stone.

The Court of Napoleon III. contains a grand marshal of the palace, a grand almoner, grand chamberlain, master of the hounds, master of the horse, and eighteen aides-de-camp of the Emperor each of whom receive $12,000 a year. There are four prefects of the palace and twelve chamberlains, whose salaries are $2,500 each. The private secretary has $8,000, his assistant $2,800, and the police inspector of the imperial residences has $4,000. The Cabinet ministers are paid $20,000 each, and their secretaries from $3,500 to $5,000. There are seven privy councillors who are paid $30,000 each. The senators get $1,500 a month; their salary is $6,000 each. The President of the Senate has $50,000; the Vice-President, the grand referendaire, and the Secretary, $12,000.

M. Prevost Paradol, of whom there is so much talk in Paris just now, is well known for his love of horsemanship, as well as his little regard for the present dynasty. A curious circumstance happened to him a few years since. Being unable to keep a stable of his own, he had hired a horse from a dealer. It was a strong, spirited animal, and off he galloped on it to the Bois. There he fell in with the Prince Imperial, attended by a small escort of dragoons. Just then the bugler blew a call, at the sound M. Prevost Paradol's horse pricked up its ears and suddenly joined the troop. In spite of all his efforts to prevent it, the young journalist was carried along with the escort, and had to ride into the courtyard of the Tuileries in attendance on the Prince. It turned out he was mounted on an old cavalry horse.

Gustave Doré, it seems, is not to illustrate Shakespeare, after all. A publisher offered him four hundred thousand francs, but he demanded the round sum of a million. For the fables of La Fontaine, upon the illustrations of which he is now employed, he receives five hundred francs for each one, and it is said that after making his studies he draws two a day, for which he receives cash on delivery. He may be seen almost every day now at the Jardin des Plantes, studying the movements and peculiarities of the animals which will occupy places in this great work.

Victor Hugo rises, winter and summer, with the sun. He lights his fire and makes his coffee; then he writes, reads, or composes until eleven, and during that time no one troubles him in his meditations. At eleven, whatever the temperature may be, he goes out on the terrace of his house, which is on the same level as his room, and makes long ablutions with cold water. Then comes the breakfast hour, devoted to family chat and the reading of newspapers and letters. This meal generally lasts for an hour and a half. Then the poet takes long walks across the island. He is very fond of walking, and often stops before the points he especially admires. He is not much given to eating. His table is simply cut, and he is never troubled with the dishes before him. Although he has a good appetite, he is moderate, and no one can say that he has seen him commit the least excess. Victor Hugo goes to bed early, generally at ten o'clock. Pen, ink, and white paper are placed on a table nigh him. Often, in his broken sleep, he jots down the thoughts that pass in his mind. Sometimes he wakes in the dark, and makes hieroglyphics that in the morning he alone can decipher.

M. Prévost Paradol, the new member of the French Academy, was presented to the Emperor, at the Tuileries, on Sunday last, in accordance with the established custom. The new academician was accompanied by M. Guizot, M. Villemain, perpetual secretary of the Academy, and M. Saint-Girardin, who supplied the place of his brother-in-law, Count Rouhaldat, for the time being absent. After the formal introduction had taken place, the Emperor turned to M. Guizot, and remarked that he was pleased to see him looking so well, and, above all, that his increasing age had no effect on his mind or talent. At this compliment M. Guizot, of course, bowed. The Emperor then observed to him that he appeared to spend most of his time in the country, to which M. Guizot replied, "Sire, I there work and take a siesta." Turning to M. Prévost Paradol, the Emperor said that he always beheld with satisfaction men of merit such as he admitted to the ranks of the Academy, and his only regret was at not finding them among his friends. "I regret it also," replied the new academician. "You were severe," continued the Emperor, "on the Abbé Constitution in the 'Life of Cæsar;' for I remember to have read a work of yours, published five or six years ago, the 'Essai sur l'Histoire Universelle,' in which you spoke of Cæsar in terms not very different to those which I employed. Our opinions were then not so opposite as they appear to be now." To this observation M. Prévost Paradol made no reply. The Emperor again turning to M. Guizot, reminded him of Fontaine's remark to Napoleon I., "Sire, leave us liberty in the republic of letters." "Yes, M. Guizot," added the Emperor, "absolute liberty of appreciation." Then bestowing a few complimentary phrases on MM. Villemain and St. Marc-Girardin, and bowing to the party in turn, the Emperor brought the audience to a close.

The Emperor and Empress were present at the first performance of M. Emile Augier's new comedy, "Le Contagion," at the Odéon. The piece, like nearly all modern French comedies, treats of matters of the present day; the chief character is the Baron D'Estregaud, who fills the chair of several public companies and speculates largely on the Bourse. Like all Frenchmen of this class, he is represented as a man of very loose morals, and on his different critiques much of the plot of the piece turns. One of the schemes in which he is mixed up is the Grand Gibraltar Canal, which some French engineer has planned, and whose rights the Baron desires to acquire, so that he may sell the project, at an enormous profit, to the English Government, whom he conceives will never consent to such an interference with their interests in the Mediterranean. A notable incident connected with the Emperor's visit was the assembling of a crowd of students outside the theatre at the close of the performance, and who followed the Emperor's carriage, shouting out, "Spare the Luxembourg Gardens!"

A Washington correspondent, writing of the appearance of the fashionable thoroughfares of the Capital on pleasant afternoons, says that most of the foreign Ministers have carriages with drivers in livery. Gen. Grant, when alone, appears in a top buggy with a gray nag; Secretary Seward rides in a two-horse cab; the Secretary of the Navy looks like a country merchant on horseback; Senator Sprague and his beautiful wife attract much attention in their handsome open carriage, and not so much as Senator McDougall does on horseback.

A New York artist has painted a portrait of Miss August Evans, author of "Beulah" and other books, and a lady correspondent thus describes the face: "It is an unlike the Southern type as possible. Those eyes might have caught their hue from the azure of the North, and that fair hair never meddled with the sultans in Indostan. The brown hair is gathered back from a broad, high brow—Beulah Benton's brow—revealing not the delicate shell-like ears. The eyes, of a deep gray blue, are wonderfully keen as to the intelligence. The nose just touched with sapphire, the mouth, which nature made to be beautiful, and which has grown a little over upper lip, and is slightly sour about the corners; yet with the simple white robe and the rose at her throat, you see the portrait of a lovely woman."

The style Rapière is on the increase, both as to the weapon and the wearer. Of the latter, several are now to be seen entirely of plain white satin—a material utterly discarded for years, save in the shape of a wedding robe, and most trying to the complexion. I can compare many of the present head-dresses to nothing else than a sort of cushion of curls, interlarded here and there with flowers or grass, and frequently powdered entirely over with diamond or gold powder. The whole as artificial as possible, but from the variety of forms and fashions adopted, making the general effect of an evening reception a very amusing one. Taste and fashion are evidently in a state of transition, and as to ever the case under such circumstances, in more serious matters than those of dress, every change is allowed (and taken) that vagrant fancies may suggest.

Fox's Old Bowery.—A limited number of nights will bring the Pantomime to its termination. Nothing in the Bowery has equaled it since the days of Norman Leslie and Hamblin's management. This is the third month of its representation, and yet the houses are full. Jack, and the American Grimaldi, is still as funny as ever. His Clown is sparkling with wit unspoken, his limbs with energy, agility and grace. Go and see, if you doubt us.

A New York reporter, describing a recent ball says, "Fashion set upon a throne of gold. For eight happy hours the scene was filled with wavy gauze and glittering satins, studded with brilliants, and warm with an atmosphere of sunlike. It was easy to mistake for the perfume of breaths the odors of the flowers which nestled everywhere, in many bosoms, on diamond-powdered coiffures, or in soft hands. It was delightful to follow the spirals of the enchanted waltz, entwining happily the form of the Golden Youthfulness of New York. It was a bath of dazzling delight, enough to intoxicate the young; and when others might endeavor, alas! to renew the impressions which are dead"—then he went to supper.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC—GRAND GERMAN OPERA. Mr. Leonard Grover commenced a short season on Tuesday evening, with his well known company of artists. The operas will be presented with a great cast, augmented choruses and an orchestra of fifty of the best instrumentalists of this city. Some of the operas announced are either entirely new to the public here, or have not been given for a number of years, such as WILLIAM TELL, MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, TANNHAUSER and others. Mr. Grover has decided, notwithstanding the enormous expenses attending a Opera, to make the admission rates at popular prices, namely, one dollar to Parquette and Dress Circle; 50 cts. extra for Reserved Seats; Family Circle 50 cts., and Amphitheatre 25 cts.

Wherever this celebrated company appeared, in Philadelphia, Boston and the West, they had a decided success, and we hope to see crowded houses here during their short stay.

Victor Hugo's new work, "Les Travailleurs de la Mer," is styled by M. Jules Janin, the well known critic of the Journal des Debats, "a poem, a history, and a legend; an elegy, an epic, a war song, a cry, traversing the ocean, and which will be heard through ages." It is dedicate l to the Island of Guernsey, that land of hospitality and liberty, where lives the "noble petit peuple de la Mer," which has given the exile an asylum, and will preside over his tomb. The preface, which generally serves as the commentary of a work, declares that humanity has to struggle with three fixed monsties—Religion, Society and Nature—out of which struggles have grown out, temples and churches, codes, and plagues and ships. These three "monstres," as the author calls them (your unlearned readers may like to know that monstre is the Greek work for necessity) wish ever hereafter "as the monstre of Religion, the monstre of laws, and the monstre of things. In "Notre Dame de Paris" (one of Victor Hugo's early novels), the author has signalized the first of these; in "Les Misérables" he has announced the second; in the present book he indicates the third." To these three fatalities which envelop man must be added a fourth, the monstre, that of the human heart." One description of the struggle between a solitary wanderer on the sea and the gigantic and monstrous sea-polypus of a hydra like nature, abounding on the shores and in the caves of the Channel Islands, is perfectly terrific from its graphic character, and makes one grow faint and cold with horror.

ITALIAN OPERA—MATINEE AT WALLACK'S THEATRE.—A Grand Matinee of Italian Opera will be given at Wallack's Theatre on Saturday next for the benefit of Signor Massenilliani, the distinguished tenor, whose benefit was postponed twice before on account of the illness of some of the artistes, and whose excellent rendition of the part of Pollio in Norma is fresh in the memory of the musical public of this city. This occasion will be the more interesting from the fact that Madame Carozzi-Zucchi will appear for the last time before her departure for Europe, and Mlle. Stella, the highly spoken of debutante will make her debut. Sig. Bellini will also sing for the first time the part of Orovere. Thus we have one more chance to listen to the sweet strains of Bellini's great work, interpreted by Mr. Maretzek's select troupe.

The fertile brain of M. Alexandre Dumas has been at work with a combination, by which millions of revenue are to fall in to the coffers of four or five years to the Society of Men of Letters, by the construction of a large theatre capable of containing 5000 spectators. The company is to be formed, of which the shareholders are to hold a certain number of tickets for representations, the prises varying from 20 francs to 80 centimes (so this is to be a popular theatre). At the end of four years the expenses will have been covered, and the building will remain in the hands of the above society! In pursuance of the scheme, proposed at a reunion of the society, M. Alex. Dumas has written a circular requesting all the ladies of France, who approved of and entered into his views, to write him a few lines to that effect, adding their subscriptions to be received at his residence in Paris. The theatre, if so raised, will thus possess the double elements of being strictly a popular as well as a feminine achievement.

Why is a horse like the letter O? Because G makes it go. And what is the difference between this conundrum and my own who squints? One is a query with an answer, the other is an sums, sir, with a quare eye.

A carpenter was employed by a farmer, and rendered the following curious bill: "To hanging two barn doors and myself seven hours, one dollar and a half."

Great excitement prevails at Prague, the capital and university of the Austrian Kingdom of Bohemia, in consequence of the conflict between the German-Austrian and the Czec, or national Bohemian party, which has been raging for some time, and which has taken the violence in student riots and other insurrectionary demonstrations. There has not been such an agitation in Bohemia since the times of Huss, the martyr of the Reformation. While Bohemia is in a ferment, Hungary is less inclined than ever before to come to an understanding with Austria, so that on account of these disturbing influences, and also in consideration of the hostile attitude of Prussia, a family council of the Hapsburgers was recently held at Schonbrunn, the results of which, however, have not transpired.

The death of the French General Yusuf, at Cannes, after a severe and rapid illness, is just announced in the papers. He was one of the most brilliant and dashing officers of the French army, and at the time of his death had only been a few months in command of the military division of the Mediterranean, in order to take up which he had lately returned from Algeria. General Yusuf, whose services are thus lost to the country which adopted him, was barely sixty-four years of age; but his strangely diversified and romantic career was filled up with so many hair-breadth 'scapes, and so intimately connected with the stirring incidents of the French occupation of in Algeria, that it may not be uninteresting.

The new volume of the Napoleon Correspondence, published by command of our deceased host his love of books. After a day or no little mental toil and political anxiety at Schönbrun, he ate quietly down in the evening to write a long letter to his librarian at Paris on several matters of detail, all of which are full of interest to book collectors.

Alexander Dumas has brought out a new melodrama, called Ambigu Comique, in which he plays the part of his own novels. The piece, "Gabriel Lambert," came up to expectation, was a failure, or nearly so. M. Alexander Dumas, in a long speech, to the novelty of the situation, wrote a lengthened apology for the piece, and made the exception, with his own name affixed, in one of the daily papers.

Artificial Flowers.

Among the many new stores opened this season, we notice especially T he Parisian Flower Company, 551 and 553 Broadway. This establishment has the finest rooms on Broadway, and their exhibition of Artificial Flowers is really one of the sights of the metropolis.

Beautiful Teeth are Always Fragile, And short-lived will be their whiteness, their lustre, their smoothness, without scrupulous care; but if brushed daily with the pure and purifying SOZODONT, they will retain their beauty even when the brow is wrinkled and the hair is gray.

Worthy the attention of the Trade. We refer to the well-known Jewelry House of R. T. HAYWARD, No. 208 Broadway, Room No. 9, up stairs. We have long known this house and its reputation for low prices and honorable dealing, and may truly be called the Manufacturers of the Craft. We most sincerely recommend all those in want of any kind of Jewelry, Watch Chains, or Masonic Emblems, to order from this House or visit is before purchasing.

Beauty.

The use of cosmetics to remove blemisher in the complexion, or to restore to the faded cheek its original beauty and youth, is common among the ladies of all civilized nations. Some of the preparations used for this purpose not only fail of the desired effect, but are positively injurious, containing as they do lead or other poisons in solution. Even fatal results following the indiscriminate use of some of these poisonous compounds are not unknown. It is sometimes difficult to select among the great number of articles offered for a lady's toilet, but from our knowledge of its qualities, we have no hesitation in recommending the "Bloom of Youth," prepared by Mr. George W. Laird. Its delightful perfume renders it a most welcome addition to the toilet, while its virtues in preserving and restoring the complexion to beauty are beyond all praise. The Bloom of Youth can be procured of druggists everywhere.

Cholera Preventive.

An old friend of Mr. Rowe remarked to us the other day, that he knew of a certain Preventive of Cholera for Diarrhœa Obewers. When we eagerly inquired what the article was, he replied in a low tone, that all Obewers should use—that nothing but that purest of all Fine Cut Tobacco just introduced, and known as the "SOLAR," manufactured by Messrs. Rose & Co., at Nos. 208 and 208 Fulton-street, New York, and for sale everywhere. In resetting the above information we sent instantly for some, and we are confident, should it in the least suit the delicate specimen of the pars we do have ever used, and therefore recommend all our day-evening friends to try it, and be convinced for themselves. Don't forget about the brand with any other. Ask for "SOLAR."

This is to certify that I have tested and used the "PEARLINE ODONTOLINE," prepared by Chas. F. Rogers, and consider it a rare and excellent wash for the Teeth.

Dr. HALSEY recommends are of the first order, while the purity and sweetness which it imparts to the mouth are most refreshing.

A preparation which combines properties at once both AGREEABLE and BENEFICIAL, CLEANSING and YET SAFE, to the degree attained by the "ODONTOLINE" can scarcely be over estimated.

"Will you give me that ring?" said a village dandy to a lady, "for it resembles my love to you, it has no end." "Excuse me, sir," was the reply, "I choose to keep it as emblematic of mine for you; it has no beginning."

A bas that Congressmen never inflict upon us—Syntax.

What would this world be without woman? A perfect blank, like a sheet of paper, not even ruled.

"You labor too hard on your compositions, doctor," said a flippant clergyman to a venerable divine. "I write a sermon in three hours, and think nothing of it." "Neither do your congregation," quoth the doctor.

A man in Cincinnati adopted an original way of reducing household expenses. One morning, when he knew his wife would see him, he blazed the servant girl. The household expenses were instantly reduced twelve dollars per week.

"Boy, what is your father doing to-day?" "Well, I s'pose he's failin'. I heard him tell mother yesterday to go round to the shops and get trusted all she could, and do it right smart, for off, too—for he'd got everything to fall up to nothing, 'cepin' that.

A poor Irishman who applied for a license to sell ardent spirits, being questioned as to the moral fitness for the trust, replied, "Ah, sure it is not much of a character that a man needs to sell rum."

"Frank," said an affectionate mother the other day to a presiding boy, "if you don't stop snuffling and reading so much, you will get so after a while that you won't care anything at all about work." "Mother," replied the hopeful, leisurely removing a very long cigar, and turning another leaf, "I have got no now."

A lady told her husband she read the "Art of Love" on purpose to be agreeable to him. "I would rather have had love without art," he replied.

An Irish judge said, when addressing a prisoner: "You are to be hanged, and I hope it will prove a warning to you."

A singing master, while teaching his pupils, was visited by a brother of the tuneful art. The visitor observing that the chandelier pitched the tune vocally, said, "Sir, do you use a pipe?" "No, sir," replied Semibreve, with admirable gravity, "I cheer."

Artemus Ward tells a good story concerning the profession of the "Lady of Lyons" at Salt Lake Theatre: "An aged Mormon arose and went out with his twenty-four wives, angrily stating that he wouldn't sit and see a play where a man could such a mussed fuss over one woman.

In France, in the middle ages, the standing of the wearer was characterized by the length and amount of hair—what a horrid bore to have been bald!—but fitful caprice played the most extravagant pranks with fashion, as one might have expected in France. Long hair was worn by the nobles and ladies at the court of Francis I., until the King happened to receive an ugly wound of the scalp, and because he took a fancy to exhibit the scar, as a matter of pride, and therefore wore his locks short—the opposite fashion obtained at once. Not long afterwards the tide of popular feeling rolled rapidly in the other direction; and in Louis the Thirteenth's time a terrible excess was committed by the introduction of perfugs and perukes of enormous shapes and sizes. As time wore on, flowing white wigs came into fashion, and on account of the scarcity of white hair, manufacturers and dealers used to have recourse to artificial means, by spreading the hairs on the grass, exposing them to the action of the air and sun, and washing them with a laxivious mixture. Bleaching occurred, but it was not permanent, being followed by a dirty color, hence the introduction of powder to imitate the real things. In England this fashion prevailed more or less during the reign of James the First. In Charles the First's time Puritanism produced considerable modifications; the ladies are said to have presented a more quiet appearance with their locks combed back and gathered in close curls; nevertheless certain little unruly bits of hair would not keep in due position, and these, somehow or another, received the name of love-locks, existing much ire in the breasts of the steadier (?) and staider folks. Prynne descanted upon them in a book entitled, "The Unlovelinne of Love Locks," whilst a Mr. Hall wrote on "The Loathesomeness of Long Hair" in 1654. The distinction between Cavaliers and Roundheads—the one closely shaved, the other supplied with flowing curls—is well known. The French fashion had its greatest attraction after the Restoration, when it was a sign of "good breeding and ton" to carry your comb about in your pocket and to frequently use it in public. Very similar in idea to the funny and disagreeably-looking practice of sucking away at a toothpick, which was so prevalent a little time since. Ladies preferred ringlets, and never refused the assistance of false ones, adopting the help also of perwigs and hats. But the plague again modified the fashions, for people feared to wear the perwigs, lest the hair should have been obtained from any who had died of the terrible epidemic disease.

The philosopher's stone is said to have been found at last. Remedial art and alchemy are no longer fabulous things of the past. MM. Dr. Benzi Fabre and Fraux have placed before the Academy their discovery of the means of transmuting silver, copper, and quicksilver into gold. Our readers who wish to grow rapidly rich are referred to a paper in the "Revue Scientific" (journal of our Paris contemporary, L'Illustration, of the 3d of February, for the details of this great discovery.

THE NEW SKIRT.

Bradley's New Patent Duplex Elliptic, Or, Double-Spring Skirt.

They will not Bend or Break like the single springs, but will Preserve their Graceful and Perfect shape, where three or four ordinary skirts will have been thrown aside as useless.

Each hoop is composed of two finely-tempered steel springs, braided tightly and firmly together, edge to edge (and called "Duplex,") forming the strongest and most flexible and agreeable hoop made.

In fact, for the Promenade, or the House, the Church, Theatre, Railroad Car, Carriage, Crowded Assemblies, &c., &c., they are superior to all others. Combining Comfort, Durability, and Economy, with that Elegance of shape which has made the DUPLEX ELLIPTIC THE STANDARD SKIRT OF THE FASHIONABLE WORLD. For Young Ladies, Misses, and Children they are superior to all others. Inquire for the Opinions of the Press.

We can only in this place give a few extracts from the leading Journals as to the character of Bradley's new Patent Duplex Elliptic Skirt:

The greatest improvement in hoop skirts is BRADLEY'S DUPLEX ELLIPTIC, or double-spring, which imparts additional strength, as well as a wonderful degree of elasticity.—New York Times.

The improvement over the old style of skirts is such that to her who has worn them will willingly exchange them for the old style, which is apt to fall in into dimes.—New York Com. Advertiser.

This peculiar skirt, seems to be accepted as the very latest step toward perfection in the now absolutely necessary hoop.—Evening Post.

The wearer is enabled to enter a carriage, a church pew, or any narrow entrance, without the least trouble or inconvenience.—N. Y. Mercury.

BRADLEY'S NEW PATENT DUPLEX ELLIPTIC, sold everywhere, is a great favorite among fashionable people for its flexibility and lightness, as well as its durability.—New York Evening Express.

The skirts above mentioned are more durable than any we have ever seen.—Home Journal.

This skirt should receive the special attention of the ladies, as it is one of the very best new in use, and is said to be the lightest, most desirable, comfortable, and economical skirt ever made.—Boston Traveller.

They are not equalled in elegance, elasticity, durability, comfort, or economy.—N. Y. Herald.

One of the most ordinary fabric a style that renders it genteel in appearance, and converts a clumsy, angular figure into the form of charming simplicity.—Boston Post.

Bradley's Skirts are now worn, wherever is borne

The products of Science and Art,

No skirt in the trade is so well liked by the ladies—

SAIN POUR D'ORSAY. "Were we not fashionable we could not live." Few ladies will not endorse this sentiment and to this almost universal feeling is due the immense manufacture of ever-changing articles of wearing apparel.—Among the latest improvements in articles of ladies' wear is the Boulevard and Crown Skirt, the elegance of which in causing it to rapidly supersede over and low gracefal styles. The January number of La Follet—that accurate in all that relates to the fickle goddess, Fashion—speaks in the highest terms of praise of this new and beautiful manufacture; and her Majesty, the Empress Eugenie, has, it is said, had Thomson's Crown Skirt in indispensable in a full wardrobe. The manufacturers of these garments, Messrs. Thomson, Bates and Co., have branches in the principal European cities, and as they make the exclusive article, of course our ladies will buy no other; and in this connection we should state for the information of our lady readers, that Arnold, Constable & Co., and other leading houses of this city, have the finest and latest styles in store.

Brilliant and Powerful day and night double Prospective Glasses, for the theatre, field, and sea, Brazilian Pebble Spectacles, and Opera Reversers, to improve the sight of old and young, by day or candle light, with ease and comfort to the eye, without the distressing effects of frequent changes. CHICKERING & SONS'

GRAND, SQUARE, AND UPRIGHT

are now, as they ever have been, considered THE BEST IN AMERICA, having been awarded

FIFTY-SIX PRIZE MEDALS, of which fourteen were received in the months of September and October, 1851.

Five or nine over all competitors at the different World's Fairs where they have been exhibited.

THE ONLY DOUBLE VENEER PIANO-FORTE IN INTERNATIONAL FAIR IN LONDON.

The only Piano-Fortes ever exhibited in an ARRANGEMENT OF THE ACRAFFE BRIDGE, which is now patented in the United States for twelve years, and believe it to be the most perfect and valuable improvement in Piano-Fortes since the introduction of the Overstrung Piano-forte.

Greatest possible depth, richness and volume of tone, combined with a rare delicacy, evenness and perfect evenness through the entire scale; as shown also in the most perfect manner under the pure and unequivocable quality of which have undergone under the most severe and trying climates.

During the past fifteen years this firm has manufactured 10,000 PIANOS in the most thorough and which they have introduced every known and valuable improvement: they have also invented and used for the great advantage of the public several discoveries, practically, both for their own and a party's benefit.

"I consider Chickering & sons' Pianos, beyond comparison, the best I have ever seen in America.

GOTTSCHALK.

"I consider Chickering & sons' Pianos superior to any others I have seen in America.

"Their double iron elastic metal is a signal mark of extreme progress. They are unrivalled for their singing qualities and for the tremendous resistance of their scale. There is a perfection, generally, throughout the register. The upper notes are remarkably free from harshness, and the lower are full, and have neither tubiness while they have a distinguished for power without harshness, and harmonious quality.

In a word, I like and admire your Pianos so much that I shall use them exclusively while I stay in the United States, and upon my return to Europe it will be my pleasure to recommend them to my friends and the public.

"Your Pianos received the highest award in the World which is indicated to me by the greatest artists for their superior excellence in every respect, quality, and we are sure would have been awarded by the Jury of the World's Fair, if it had been necessary to the manufacturers of the best Pianos of the age."

WILLIAM MASON,
Pupil of Liszt.

"I have used in every performance, your Pianos are superior to any I have ever used in this country or in Europe.

I have never known so noble a tone; it yields to every expression of the player, and has all the quality to capable of them, a sweet very sustained power, and a brilliancy which is unsurpassed. The touch is elastic and was balanced touch. In depth, volume and power of tone, I prefer your Pianos to any, and however it is forced it loses none of its original quality of tone, but is even more improved and perfect, in the power of distance entering and its quality of tone, and the touch is elastic. And the tone is quick and responsive, and is perfect subject to the control in the most delicate nerves of the fingers by the player.

I play upon them with the profoundest satisfaction, and shall not hesitate to recommend to my pupils as the best Pianos in the country.

WM. MASON.

"For sweetness and fine quality of tone, with steady of standard, and durability, Chickering's Pianos are unsurpassed.

"I always use and recommend your Pianos to my pupils and friends.

S. WEBB.

"I consider your Pianos the finest I have ever played on.

PORNASKI.

You please have authentic properties which no other instruments possess, and which will probably when known as models become as sensitive to the expression of the performer as the human voice. Their power, brilliancy, and sweetness of quality, have won the audience which in the general opinion sensitive the Pianos of other makers, and are singularly true all subjects in this country. Le Soleil has offered to Mr. Victor Hugo $120,000 for permission to publish "Les Travailleurs de la Mer" in their feuilleton. More wonderful and more honorable is the fact of Hugo's refusal of this offer, which he will call splendid. He rejects the money simply in the interests of art. The story would suffer by it; not so, he adds, with the one he is now engaged on—"Quatre Vingt-Treize."

The Detroit Advertiser and Tribune says that when Andrew Johnson was a tailor in the little town of Greenville, East Tennessee, he had the reputation of being one of the best tailors in all that region of country. So popular was he that the little boys were accustomed to sing upon the streets the following verse, the product of some youthful wit at the time:

If you want to buy a bran new coat,
I'll tell you what to do;
Go down to Andrew Johnson's shop,

Opinions of the Press.

We can only in this place give a few extracts from the leading Journals as to the character of Bradley's new Patent Duplex Elliptic Skirt:

The greatest improvement in hoop skirts is BRADLEY'S DUPLEX ELLIPTIC, or double-spring, which imparts additional strength, as well as a wonderful degree of elasticity.—New York Times.

The improvement over the old style of skirt is such that no lady who has worn them will willingly exchange them for the old style, which in fact falling into ginne.—New York Globe, Advertiser.

The peculiar skirt, seems to be accepted as the very latest step toward perfection in the now absolutely necessary hoop.—Evening Post.

The improvement enables it to enter a carriage, church pew, or any narrow entrance, without the least trouble or inconvenience.—N. Y. Herald.

BRADLEY'S NEW PATENT DUPLEX ELLIPTIC, sold everywhere, is a great favorite among fashionable people for flexibility and lightness, as well as for durability.—New York Evening Express.

The skirts above mentioned are more durable than any we have ever seen.—Home Journal.

This skirt should receive the special attention of the ladies, as it is one of the very best now in use, and is said to be the lightest, most destrable, most durable, and economical skirt ever made.—Boston Traveller.

They are not equalled in elegance, elasticity, flexibility, comfort, or economy.—N. Y. Herald.

It gives the most ordinary fabric a style that renders it genteel in appearance, and converts a cheap, ungainly figure into the form of charming simplicity.—Boston Post.

Bradley's skirts are now worn, wherever is home and economical skirt ever made.—Boston Traveller.

The products of Science and Art,
No skirt in the trade is so well liked by the ladies—
Be they Maiden, Wife, Widow, or Mother—
They may sit as they please, in a full stage at ease
And always make room for another.

THE

PIANO-FORTE

Is now universally admitted to be the

BEST PIANO-FORTE

MANUFACTURED.

Hence it is the most CELEBRATED,
Most RELIABLE,
In fact the LEADING PIANOFORTE of the present day.

It is used by all the First Musicians of this City, and elsewhere, by the NATIONAL CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, of New York, by all the high MUSICAL INSTITUTES of this Country,

Because of their IMMENSE POWER,
SWEETNESS, BRILLIANCY,
PERFECT EQUALITY OF TONE,
ELASTIC TOUCH, and GREAT DURABILITY.

A few extracts from the opinion of the leading Artists' will convince the most sceptical:

I have never seen a Piano which equals the "Weber" Piano in depth, brilliancy and singing quality of tone, thorough workmanship, and so action which gives the slightest and most rapid response, p. p. GEO. F. BRISTOW.

Amongst the many excellent Piano-fortes made in this City, the "Weber" Piano ranks foremost. The manufacturers, being a musician and a practical workman of great experience, has succeeded in making a Piano, which, for richness and brilliancy of tone, as well as for thorough workmanship, cannot possibly be surpassed. S. B. MILLS.

I take pleasure in testifying to the great merits of the "Weber" Piano. The beautiful singing quality of tone, evenness throughout the entire scale, power and elasticity, durability, delicacy and elegance of workmanship, have justly given them the first among the few Pianos on which I have ever seen. J. N. PATTISON.

After using eighteen of the "Weber" Pianos in our Conservatory over a year and a half, I can say that I have been much gratified by the universal approval of our selection from teachers and scholars, and it is my firm conviction for durability, power, p. p., and all the qualities necessary to a perfect Piano, no Piano can be found which equals the "Weber" Piano.
EDMUND MOLLENHAUER, Music Director.

Allow me to add my name to the many musical professors who have given their testimony as to the unrivaled excellence of your Pianos. In sweetness, power, equality, and that most desirable of all qualities, which we sometimes express by calling it refinement of tone, your Piano, in my estimation, stands first among the many splendid Pianos produced in this country.
CLARA M. BRINKERHOFF.

A ten years' acquaintance with the "Weber" Piano satisfies me that they are as good as the music of his celebrated namesake, C. M. V. Weber.
Boston Transcript.

The "Weber" Pianos are unsurpassed. I prefer them for my own practice; have known them for eight years; have been the means of selling many, and do not know of an instance where they failed to sustain their high reputation. HENRY S. CUTLER, Musical Dr.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

The last weeks are announced of "Young Mrs. Winthrop," at the Madison Square Theatre, to make way for Mr Burton Harrison's charming comedy, entitled "A Russian Honeymoon."

"Monte Cristo," with James O'Neil and Katherine Rogers in the title roles, continues to draw large houses at Booth's Theatre.

"Iolanthe" continues to do good business at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, and will be continued until further notice.

Mr. Bartley Campbell has scored another dramatic success in his new play, "Siberia," which draws large and delighted audiences to Haverly's Theatre, Fourteenth Street.

Mr. J. K. Emmet appears for the first time in his new play, "Fritz in England and Ireland," at Niblo's Garden Theatre the present week.

John T. Raymond "In Paradise," is at the Windsor Theatre this week.

"Seven-Twenty-Eight" has proved a bonanza to the management of Daly's Theatre, and is said to be a great artistic success.

Thatcher, Primrose & West, with their great minstrel organization, will delight the audiences at the Cosmopolitan Theatre the whole of this week.

The "Silver King" is in for a long run at Wallack's, being pronounced one of the best productions this season.

Mr. Shayne, the well-known furrier, is to open a large store up-town in the fall, his premises in Prince Street having proved too small for his greatly increased business.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Windsor Theatre during the summer, has been materially altered and improved for the better protection and comfort its patrons. New and substantial walls have been built throughout, and an extra exit eight feet wide on each floor has been opened leading directly to the street, which together, with other improvements under the Building Department make the Windsor without doubt, the safest theatre in America.

The well-known and always welcome comedian, Mr. John T. Raymond will entertain the patrons of this theatre the present week in his new comedy, "Paradise." Mr. Raymond has met with great success through the country with his play, and will no doubt draw crowded houses to this theatre, where he is always sure of a hearty welcome. Matinees as usual Wednesday and Saturday.

Next week, another strong attraction will play one week's engagement at this house, M. B. Curtis in "Sam'l of Posen."

M. F. LYONS'
OYSTER and DINING ROOM,
259—BOWERY—259
Bet. Houston & Stanton Sts. NEW YORK.
OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.

"SAM'L OF POSEN."

Next Monday Evening, March 19th, M. B. Curtis will again produce his famous characterization of "Samuel Plastrick" in the sparkling comedy drama of "Sam'l of Posen" at this theatre. Mr. Curtis has always attracted and delighted large audiences with his capital rendition of the commercial drummer, which is an artistic, natural, and very funny characterization, thoroughly worked up from beginning to end. It is without doubt one of the best characterizations now presented on the stage. The rendition is entirely free from exaggeration and extravagances, which might be looked for; and as the energetic, honest yet shrewd drummer, Mr. Curtis wins and holds the sympathies of the audiences from beginning to end of play. There are many features in the representation that are deserving of praise, and contribute to render the compartively new drama worthy of the excellent reputation it has gained. Mr. Curtis brings with him his original and entire company, and the same which supported him during his brilliant engagements in New York City. The play will be handsomely mounted and set, the first act representing the interior of a metropolitan jewelry store.

M. B. Curtis and his wife have a pet parrot, which is their constant traveling companion, and which speaks the King's English with amazing fluency. The loquacious bird caused quite a panic at the Windsor Hotel one night. It seems that the Curtis family occupied rooms directly adjoining Governor Tabor's apartments at the hotel, and one evening, as the Governor was entering his apartments he heard what he thought was a female voice saying. "Hello, baby." The Governor was a trifle startled. He is a very gallant man, but he could not for the life of him imagine what he had ever done to warrant any female in addressing him so familiarly. The salutation appeared to be intended for him, and it came from the transom over the door of the room directly across the hall. The Governor was non-plussed. "Hello, baby—pretty baby," said the voice again, and the Governor blushed as he stroked his fierce moustache and tried to brace up and look dignified. "Won't you come and kiss your baby?" called the voice again, in a deliciously seductive sort of a way. Now the Governor seldom takes a dare of any kind. To do him justice, he is a brave man, and at that particular moment he felt big enough to tackle an army. He crept softly over to the door and asked, "Are you talking to me?" "Nice baby," said the voice, but no sooner had the voice spoken than another voice from inside the room—a big, burley, man's voice called out, "Go away from that door and let the parrot go to sleep!" It was Mr. Curtis who spoke, but he had no idea it was Governor Tabor outside. Governor Tabor slid quietly to his room, but he thought it was such a good joke he had to tell the boys about it after supper, and in the Opera House lobby last night it was all the talk.—The Tribune, Denver, Colorado.

An ingenious tramp, thinking with a new science to wring tears and money-assistance from the stoniest hearts, gave it an experimental trial in a nothern suburb. He has decided not to patent the invention. He told a lady of his unfortunate condition, and asked if he might eat some of the grass in the front garden. The lady, not less amused than surprised, said, "Certainly." He went out, and, getting down on all-fours, commenced on the grass after the neglected and never-popular fashion of Nebuchadnezzar, and apparently not enjoying the diet any more than that ancient sinner of olden time. Presently the tramp's anxious eye caught sight of the servant girl beckoning to him from the side gate. He thought a rich reward for his humility was in store and instantly responded. "Did you beckon to me?" said he. "Yes." "What did you want?" He now wore a look of most hopeful expectancy. "You may go into the back garden if you like; the grass is taller there."

At the San Francisco Opera House, Easter Monday, March 26th, Willie Edouin's Sparks Company will appear in their New Play, by Charles Hoyt, "A Bunch of Keys; or, the Hotel." A keen satire on Hotels.

IMPORTANT.—Mrs. Langtry has been the topic of the day—her name spoken at every fireside; but the little Miss forming the beautiful fountain covered with icicles is of far greater interest to the public, being the only one in the world. The same may be said of Huber's Prospect Oyster and Chop House, Ladies' Restaurant, Lunch Rooms, Winter Garden, Concert Hall and Hotel. Table d'Hote, 75c.; with wine, $1.00. The only house in the world of such unlimited accommodations. Philip Leve's celebrated orchestra of soloists every afternoon and evening. 14th to 13th Sts., near 4th Avenue.

Two Singular Men.—A stranger with long hair, a white coat, and a white hat with a crape band, entered a Griswold street restaurant yesterday, and said to the proprietor:

"Sir, let me explain in advance that I am a singular man."

"All right, sir. A singular man's order is as good as any one else's."

"I want six oysters on the half-shell—on the left-hand half, if you please."

The oysters were opened and placed before him, and when he had devoured them he said:

"Now take six oysters, run them through a clothes-wringer to remove the dampness, and fry them for me in olive oil."

This order was also filled, when he called for a cup of salt and water, added milk and sugar, and drank it down and asked for his bill.

"I also desire to explain in advance that I am a singular man," replied the proprietor. "Your bill is $2."

"Impossible!"

"Just $2, sir."

"But that is monstrous!"

"Perhaps it seems high, but that's my singular way of charging for singular lunches."

"I'll never pay it!"

"Then I'll sadden your heart!"

The sad proceedings were about to begin when the long-haired man forked over and walked out. The lesson seemed to sink deep into his heart, for he halted at a fruit store and, without any explanations in advance, paid the usual price for a banana and carried it off without asking the seller to dip the ends in rose-water.

Evils of Early Rising.—John Quincy Adams and Josiah Quincy were enthusiastic advocates of early rising. They practised it from boyhood, and attributed to it their physical vigour in old age. Judge Story, who was an intimate friend, loved dearly a good morning nap, and their opposite opinions often gave rise to sharp and witty discussions. On one occasion, when the two eminent men had dined with the judge, he invited them to accompany him to the law-school in Cambridge, where he was to deliver a lecture. He invited the ex-President to talk to the students, and Mr. Adams made interesting practical remarks, touching among other topics, on his favourite theme of early rising. The judge went on with his lecture. The afternoon was hot and the lecture-room close, and towards the close of the lecture he noticed that the class were nodding to each other and smiling. Looking first on his right and then on his left, he discovered the secret of their merriment, for both of the distinguished visitors were asleep and nodding. He could not resist the temptation to add a postcript to his lecture. "Young gentlemen, I call your attention to the visible proofs of the evils of early rising." The loud laugh that followed awoke the gentlemen, but they did not understand the joke that caused it.

Hogarth's Picture of the Red Sea.—Hogarth was once applied to by a miserly old nobleman, to paint for his staircase a representation of the destruction of Pharaoh's host in the Red Sea. In attempting to fix upon the price, Hogarth became quite dissatisfied. The miser was unwilling to give more than one-half the real value of the picture. At last, Hogarth, out of all patience, agreed to his patron's terms. Within a day or two the picture was ready. The nobleman was surprised at such expedition, and called to examine it. The canvas was painted all over red.

"Zounds!" said the purchaser, "what have you here? I ordered a scene of the Red Sea."

"The Red Sea you have," said Hogarth, still smarting to have his talents undervalued.

"But where are the Israelites?"

"They are all gone over."

"And where are the Egyptians?"

"They are all drowned."

The miser's confusion could only be equalled by the haste with which he paid his bill. The hiter was hit.

Pete's Delight.—A rather elderly darkey was inquiring of a policeman if he knew anying of his son Pete. The policeman replied that there was a young darkey in the lock-up for breaking up a meeting with a axe-handle. "Dat's him! Dat's my chile Pete!" exclaimed the overjoyed parent. "He told me he was gwine to 'muse hisself."

SCENE FROM MANKIND.

The Baltimore Sun of October 17th, says of this play: "Augustin Daly's company produced at the Holiday Street Theatre last night Paul Merritt's emotional drama, "Mankind," from its great Summer success at Daly's Theatre, in New York. The scene is laid in England, and the story is that of a persecuted young wife, whose husband desires to get rid of her in order to marry a wealthier woman. Instead of applying for a divorce, as he would have done had he been a native of Indiana or Connecticut, he undertakes to dispose of his inconvenient partner by tossing her from a channel steamer into the sea, but the pitying gods decree her rescue, and she reappears on terra firma to confound the schemes of her unappreciative husband. Connected with the main thread of the plot of persecution is another which leads to her husband's father, who is also bent upon the ruin of the unfortunate woman, whom he has discovered is entitled to an immense fortune, which he and his law partner—another diabolical and utterly ungallant old villain—want to divert into their own pockets. Altogether the audience is made aware that the heroine has married into a very bad lot. However, as has already been intimated, all the villains are very properly brought to confusion in the end, and when the curtain drops in the final scene all the virtuous characters are in a delightfully pleasant state of happiness and prosperity.

BARRETT, THE GREAT NEW YORK TAILOR, 282 & 284 Bowery, (cor. Prince St.) NEW YORK. Pants made to order in 3 hours if required. Suits in 6 hours. Branches—PARIS, LONDON and BERLIN.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Windsor Theatre during the summer, has been materially altered and improved for the better protection and comfort its patrons. New and substantial walls have been built throughout, and an extra exit eight feet wide on each floor has been opened leading directly to the street, which together, with other improvements under the Building Department make the Windsor without doubt, the safest theatre in America.

THE WINDSOR THEATRE.

The great emotional drama "Mankind," will be presented to the audiences of this Theatre the present week, with Matinees on Tuesday, Wednesday and Saturday. It will be remembered that this drama was a great success at Daly's Theatre last August, and has been received throughout the country by large and enthusiastic audiences.

Next week, the popular young actor Oliver Doud Byron, plays an engagement in "Across the Continent," and "Ten Thousand Miles Away." The patrons of the Windsor will recognize Mr. Byron as an old favorite, and will no doubt accord him a hearty reception.

M. F. LYONS'
OYSTER and DINING ROOM,
259—BOWERY—259
Bet. Houston & Stanton Sts. NEW YORK.
OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.

THE PERENNIAL SCRAWL.—"Scribblers," said a hotel clerk the other day, "are among the many nuisances we have to encounter. They infest the reading-room and waste our stationery; they write all over the blotters; they fill waste baskets with scratched envelopes; they write on the walls, the doors, the advertising books, the bills of fare, and even in the Bibles. The young married couples are fond of scrawling their names. The bride plays with her new name as with a toy. She likes to write it and to see it written; and the bridegroom, having little else to do, humors her. I could show you fifty window panes with names and initials scratched in this way with diamond rings. The idiots and vandals often leave their addresses in this way, and if we could prove that they wrote them, we would sue for damages. I have seen a costly plate-glass mirror marred by some heedless scribbler's diamond ring. It takes at least one day each week for a servant to scrub off as much as can be removed of the pencilings which idle travelers inscribe in various parts of the house."

Fogg "put his foot into it" badly the other afternoon. It was rather dark in the tram-car as he entered, but he thought he recognized his friend Pingrey sitting in the middle: so he gave him a push, saying, "Come, move over! Do you want all the car to yourself?" It was not Pingrey; it was a stranger. Fogg stammered out an apology. "I thought," said he, "you were a gentleman——" "Did you?" interrupted the stranger. "Well, sir, nobody will ever mistake you for one."

HOW TO SAVE MONEY IN BUYING CLOTHING.—BRONNER & Co., of 610 to 618 Broadway, advise the "comparing" test. Ascertain the prices asked elsewhere for Fall and Winter Clothing for business or dress purposes, and then call and examine their stock and prices, is the suggestion they throw out, and a commendable one it seems.

The terrible Cough which generally accompanies Bronchitis yields to Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

THE PROSPECT GARDEN, 106 and 108 14th Street, is now open for the accommodation of theatre parties. Mr. Huber has improved this favorite resort during the Summer, sparing no expense to increase the accommodation and comfort of his patrons. His orchestra is one of the finest in the city, and the game and oyster suppers served in the restaurant are unsurpassed.

Be honest! We believe in it, and that is why Ubert's Tar, Boneset and Honey, the Great Cough Remedy, is so popular. 25c. Everywhere.

FASHIONABLE fur garments this season are Otter and Seal-skin Dolmans. Paletots and Ulsters 44 to 50 inches long, and Sacques close fitting, 36 to 42 long. Beaver will be the popular trimming. C. C. SHAYNE, wholesale manufacturer, 103 Prince street (formerly of Broadway), the recognized leading furrier, will offer goods at retail this season. This affords a splendid opportunity for ladies to order goods direct from the manufacturer and save the profit of middle-men. All goods produced by this house are standard styles, and every garment is made from selected skins properly cured and dressed and thoroughly reliable.—Harper's Weekly.

McCANN'S $1.90, $2.40 and $2.90 Derby's, same as sold elsewhere for $2.50, $3.00 and 4.50. 218 Bowery.

Theatrical Notes.

Mr. Joe Emmet is this week at Haverly's Niblo's Garden Theatre. "Fritz in Ireland" is, of course, the attraction.

At Haverly's Fourteenth Street Theatre "Kit, the Arkansas Traveller" is drawing large audiences. Mr. Chanfrau's popularity is unbounded.

"Dreams; or Fun in a Photograph Gallery," is the prevailing attraction at the Novelty Theatre.

The San Francisco Minstrels are doing a wonderfully big business and Birch & Backus have it in contemplation to purchase the Grand Opera House, their present establishment not being nearly large enough to accommodate their numerous patrons.

Of all the inventions for solid comfort German Corn Remover stands at the head.

Madison Square Theatre.

Messrs. Riker & Son—After giving your American Face Powder a thorough trial, I must say that it fully merits the praise that I have everywhere heard bestowed upon it. Very sincerely yours, EFFIE ELLSLER.

Annie Pixley is at the Park Theatre (Brooklyn) and "M'lice, the Child of the Sierras," constitutes the programme.

Fanny Davenport is playing a farewell engagement at Haverly's Fifth Avenue Theatre.

It is rumored that Haverly will have the Grand Opera House upon the expiration of Messrs. Poole & Donnelly's lease.

Mrs. Chanfrau has been very successful in her new version of "East Lynne."

The London and Liverpool Clothing Company, corner of Bowery and Hester streets, are making the best window display in the city. The corner window contains a life-size wax figure of the late President, besides an immensely varied quantity of clothing. The lower window is stocked up with boys' clothing, and shows four wax figures of boys. In the center is the wooden image of a pony, upon whose back sits the life-sized wax figure of a boy, dressed in a jockey suit. The appearance of both windows is strikingly attractive, and holds the attention of large crowds. The London & Liverpool Clothing Company are transacting an enormous business.

THE WINDSOR THEATRE.

TONY DENIER'S famous "Humpty-Dumpty" Pantomime will be presented at this house during the week. This splendid Holiday attraction has been determined upon by the management as the most appropriate offering at this festive season. "Humpty-Dumpty" never stales or grows wearisome; in fact, there is a freshness, an originality, a vim and go in the piece that is peculiar to it, and which is absolutely wanting in other productions. The pantomime is played by a company that has no equal in this line, and is universally approved. CLOWN is represented by the great ALFRED MACO, Pantaloon by GEORGE STEELE, Harlequin by GEORGE TOPACK, and Columbine by MLLE. LAURA MACO. "Humpty-Dumpty" will be seen here but for one week, and will then betake himself elsewhere.

Prof. SAUSE, the most popular and well-known teacher of dancing in this city, is meeting with deserved success with his school at Clarendon Hall. His method is simple and thorough. His "Art of Dancing" is the most complete work on the subject published, and must prove invaluable to the dancing public.

Our Æsthetic Styles on a Sierra Poet, Texas Cowboy or Colorado Millionaire, would just capture a romantic young woman "Cold." But for the every-day young man, whether he is in Law, Literature, Dry-Goods or Idleness, one of our Two 90-100 hats is the correct thing. MCCABE'S, 218 Bowery, the same class of goods can be procured elsewhere for Four 50-100.

A man about to be executed is always dressed to kill—but it is no joking matter.

"See here, John, is your sweetheart a factory girl?" "Yes, William, satisfactory."

Sealskin Sacques, Dolmans and fur-lined garments will be more fashionable than ever this season. The styles manufactured by C. C. SHAYNE, 103 Prince Street, (formerly of Broadway), are the most popular. The goods are made from selected skins, properly cured and dressed, elegantly finished, and are thoroughly reliable in every particular. Spain thinks it is the funniest thing in the world to see Mercedes Dolorosa, Del Formosa, Anna Maria, Catalina de Villa France, Esmeralda, Milwaukee, Squawkee, Anna Bolena, Isabella—sneeze.

One of the most useful and curious products of that wonderful substance Petroleum, is the article known as "Vaseline," or petroleum jelly. A few years ago it was quite unknown, and now hardly a household is without it. As a universal remedy for burns, wounds, rheumatism, catarrh, chilblains, skin diseases, sore throat, colds, &c., it is without doubt the most efficient substance ever discovered, while the toilet articles made from the pure Vaseline, such as pomades, cold cream, camphor-ice, toilet soaps, &c., are in universal use, and acknowledged to be superior to all similar productions or substitutes. These articles are sold by all respectable druggists. The prices are lower than those of similar articles, but imitations abound, (as they always do of good things,) and buyers should insist upon having original packages put up by the Chesebrough Manufacturing Company, with their name upon them. None others are genuine.

WORTH'S PALACE MUSEUM

106 & 108 EAST FOURTEENTH STREET, Bet. 3d & 4th Aves.

PROF. E. M. WORTH, Proprietor. C. A. WILSON, Manager.

PROF. E. M. WORTH.

Prof. E. M. Worth is a nephew of that grand New York hero, Gen. Wm. J. Worth, of Troy. Having a great liking for travel, he has visited all parts of the earth, and expended an immense amount of money in purchasing the choicest and most wonderful curiosities that could be found, embracing rare coins, historical relics, etc., sufficient in quantity and value to stock half a dozen museums.

His collection furnishes just what the moral and religious portion of the community want—as unobjectionable place of amusement, where every one can go and be highly entertained, instructed and satisfied. The Living Curiosities presented will be the best and the stage entertainments equal to the best novelty houses in the city.

OUR PROGRAMME.

In introducing this Programme of Worth's Palace Museum—as the Museum itself needs no introduction, being thronged daily by thousands of our best people and admirers of art as found there in large variety, and acknowledged by all to be an immense and permanent success—the publishers would respectfully call the attention of the public in general and advertisers in particular to the advantages of this Programme, as an advertising medium.

Prof. Worth's collection in itself has a world-wide reputation for completeness and rarity, which, combined with the wonderful living curiosities, go to make up one of the most successful and high-class places of amusement in the world.

The stage performances—three matinees and three evening entertainments daily, including Sunday sacred concerts—are of the order which not only amuse and entertain our large audiences, but instruct as well—the whole being under the able management of Mr. C. A. Wilson, a gentleman widely known as being thoroughly conversant with the wants of an amusement-loving public.

As we certainly have an assured advantage in the circulation of our Programme over that of any other house of amusement in the city—our distribution being upwards of 30,000 copies per week—we do not hesitate in saying that this Programme deserves the careful consideration of our merchants and business men.

Respectfully,

GEORGE E. BROWN,
Publisher.

A citizen of Fresno, Cal., has started a 'possum farm. He will also raise large quantities of persimmons and sweet potatoes, and his dinners in the fall of the year will diffuse joy throughout the community.

North Carolina has a colored auntie named Poverty Simmons, who is 109 years old. Possessing several thousand dollars' worth of property, Auntie Poverty is not a member of the society of that name.

Mr. John Taggart, of New York, has a trained dog which astonishes all his friends. He can run errands with more reliability than a child, and every morning he is sent to the meat market with a basket and a note and brings back untouched whatever he is sent for. Mr. Taggart prizes him more highly, however, from the fact that he can "rush the growler."

A gentleman living near Portland recently dreamed that in a certain hole under a stump of a tree he would find a fur collar which had been stolen from his wife. He visited the field, found the stump, and placing his hand in the hole felt a furry substance, pulled it out and dropped the skunk on short notice, and has since been fumigating the clothes he wore on the occasion. Dreams are failures.

Americans and Frenchmen.

As I said at the beginning of this paper, I found great difficulty in summing up in a short article the many impressions I formed during six months' stay in America. I may, however, safely assert that the well read, well bred American is the most delightful of men, and that good American society is among the wittiest, the most genial, refined and hospitable I have met with.

But the more I travel and the more I look at other nations the more convinced am I that the French, with all their faults, are the happiest people on earth. The Americans are certainly on the road to the possession of all that can contribute to the well being and success of a nation, but they seem to me to have missed the path that leads to real happiness. I do not think they know how to live. Their domestic joys are more shadowy than real. To live in a whirl is not to live well. America suffers from a general plethora. The French shopkeeper, for instance, who, in our small provincial towns, locks the door of his shop from 12:30 till 1:30, so as not to be disturbed by customers while he is enjoying his dinner with his wife and children, is nearer to the solution of that great problem of life, happiness, than the American in his headlong chase after affluence. The Frenchman says to himself: "I want to live as well and as long as I can: I know I shall never have another chance."

It is often charged against the Americans that they are given to bragging. But so are we all, in a different manner. And may not men who have done marvels be permitted a certain amount of self glorification? It is said, too, that their eccentricity constantly leads them into folly and sometimes into license. But is it not better to have the liberty to err than to be obliged to run straight in leash? Their politics appeared to me perfectly childish, but if I am right, I may add that, like children, they will learn. It is by voting that people learn to vote.—Max O'Rell.
